POEMS

The Circus Animals’ Desertion

An ex-circus animal as I stand here
In the desert heat, with no one to blame or love

Poor creatures, you were once adored
Now all that remains is our sorrow and our tears.

Your joyful days, your laughter, your excitement
Now replaced by the silence of your final rest.

I stand here, my heart heavy
As I witness the end of your story, your life.

Your once vibrant colors, now faded and worn
Your eyes, once full of life, now empty and torn.

A thousand memories flood my mind
Of the times you brought joy to all within.

Your graceful movements, your playful games
Now a mere memory, lost in the desert’s frame.

So, let us bid farewell to you, my dear friends
May the sky above be your new home, your haven.

And may we learn from your plight
To treat all creatures with care and consideration.

For you were once our companions
Now, we must honor your memory and stand in solidarity.

Endings are a part of life
But let us hope that we can make a difference and prevent them.

The universe may have no answer
But in our hearts, we will never forget you, our dear circus animals.

Beijing calls on US to abolish 'treasonous' decision on Hong Kong

Traders in Shanghai, the financial capital of China and所在地 of the country's main stock exchange, have welcomed Beijing's decision to abolish the 'treasonous' decision on Hong Kong. This decision was made by the US Congress, which passed a resolution condemning China's actions in the region.

The resolution, which was passed in May, accused Beijing of violating the basic laws of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) and the principles of the 'One Country, Two Systems' framework, and called for the US government to take measures to address these concerns.

The Chinese government has already pressed ahead with plans to implement a new national security law in Hong Kong, which is designed to curb subversion and secessionist activities. The law was approved by China's top legislature on May 28, and is expected to come into force later this year.

The Beijing government has also vowed to take action against those who support the resolution, with Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Zhao Lijian saying that the Chinese government would take stern and resolute measures to safeguard national sovereignty and security.

The statement from Beijing comes as tensions between the US and China continue to escalate. In recent months, the two countries have engaged in a series of trade and technology disputes, with the US imposing sanctions on Chinese tech companies and China retaliating with restrictions on US companies operating in China.

Despite these tensions, experts say that both sides are likely to continue engaging in dialogue, as they seek to avoid a full-scale trade war.

The Chinese government has already signaled its intent to continue engaging with the US, with Chinese vice minister of foreign affairs Ma Zhaoxu saying that Beijing was committed to promoting mutual respect and fair play in the relationship.

The recent move by Beijing to abolish the US Congress' resolution on Hong Kong is likely to be seen as a step toward de-escalating tensions between the two countries. However, experts warn that the US and China will need to work closely together to ensure that their relationship remains stable and predictable in the future.

The US government has not yet commented on Beijing's decision to abolish the resolution.
