CHANDIGARH, JUL 7

The regular 'band, bajaa, baraat' were missing but the festivities seemed intact as Punjab Chief Minister Bhagwant Mann turned groom for his wedding with a doctor from Kurukshetra at his home on Thursday.

It was a private ceremony without the usual crowds, so much a part of the big, fat Indian wedding. Though few details were available, visuals on television and Twitter showed Mann and his bride dressed in red at the Anand Karaj ceremony.

Aam Aadmi Party colleague

Raghav Chadha also shared some images on Twitter showing

Mann, in his regular yellow turban and a gold coloured kurta-pyjama, with party chief Arvind Kejriwal and others.

Mann (48), the first chief minister of the state to get married while in office, is tying the knot with Dr Gurpreet Kaur from Pehowa in Kurukshetra in Haryana.

This is Mann's second marriage. He separated from his first wife in 2015 -- they have two children, daughter Seerat Kaur (21) and son Dilshan (17).

Tight security arrangements were in place at the chief minister's home in Sector 2.

Gurpreet Kaur (30) shared a picture of herself on Twitter and wrote, "Din Shagna Da Chadya (the day of marriage has arrived)".

She also thanked AAP leaders for their congratulatory messages.

According to party insiders, the wedding, being solemnised according to Sikh rituals, was attended by Mann's mother and sister and just a few guests, including Kejriwal and his family. Kejriwal told reporters at the airport, Today is a day of immense happiness that my younger brother and Punjab Chief Minister Bhagwant Mann ji is getting married and is making a new beginning. "May God bless him with a happy married life and both (the couple) always remain happy. AAP MP Chadha shared several pictures on his Twitter handle, one post showing Mann and himself on a sofa. He quoted a Punjabi song of celebration, "Saade veer da vyah, Saanu gode gode chah", as the caption. There were also pictures of the groom at his festooned home, walking under a canopy held up by Chadha among others, and at the ceremony.

British PM Boris Johnson announces resignation

Will remain in-charge till new leader is elected

AGENCY
LONDON, JULY 7

British Prime Minister Boris Johnson, on Thursday, agreed to step down as Conservative Party leader, triggering a leadership election for a new Tory leader who will go on to become the new Prime Minister, according to reports from Downing Street.

Johnson, 58, will remain in charge at 10 Downing Street until the process of electing a new leader is completed by the time of the Conservative Party conference, scheduled for October. He is expected to formally announce his resignation later on Thursday.

The move came after days of high drama and a steady stream of resignations from his Cabinet since Tuesday and just minutes after his newly appointed Chancellor to replace Rishi Sunak wrote a public letter calling for him to "go now".

Nadhim Zahawi, the Iraqi-origin minister seen as a frontrunner to replace Johnson in 10 Downing Street, wrote a damning letter that openly questioned his boss' authority and demanded his exit. While not officially resigning from his new Cabinet post, the 55-year-old minister said the time was up for Johnson.

"Prime minister, you know in your heart what the right thing to do is, and go now," he signs off.

Johnson finally agreed to step down after one of his closest allies, Treasury Chief Nadhim Zahawi, told the prime minister to resign for the good of the country.

It was not immediately clear whether Johnson will stay in office while the Conservative Party chooses a new leader, who will automatically become prime minister as well. "Prime Minister: This is not sustainable and it will only get worse: for you, for the Conservative Party and most importantly of all the country," Zahawi said in a letter to Johnson. "You must do the right thing and go now." The latest minister to resign is Environment Minister Rebecca Pow. The MP announced her decision with a series of tweets this morning, after reports Boris Johnson resigned as Tory leader. Pow said her decision came as "values, integrity and the morals by which I live are at stake". "This week I've been at home with COVID-19. Earlier this morning I tendered my resignation as Environment Minister. Values, integrity and the morals by which I live are at stake, and the needs of the country must always come first. My letter follows," tweeted Pow. Caroline Johnson and Luke Hall, deputy chairs of the Conservative Party, and Rob Butler, a Parliamentary Private Secretary (PPS) at the Foreign Office, announced their resignations on Thursday. In her letter to UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson posted on Twitter, Caroline Johnson said "it is with great sadness, however, that I recognize that over time the cumulative effect of your errors and judgment and domestic actions have squandered the goodwill of our great Party, Conservative colleagues, and many of my constituents."

Jaishankar holds discussion with Chinese counterpart over 'outstanding issues'

AGENCY
BALI, JULY 7

External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar on Thursday met with his Chinese counterpart Wang Yi on the sidelines of the G20 Foreign Ministers Meeting and held discussions over "outstanding issues" including the border situation.

Taking to Twitter, Jaishankar wrote, "Began my day in Bali by meeting FM Wang Yi of China. Discussion lasted one hour. Focused on specific outstanding issues in our bilateral relationship pertaining to the border situation. Also spoke about other matters including students and flights."

Moreover, Jaishankar also shared perspectives on the international situation and its impact on the G20 deliberations.

In May this year, India and China held talks on border issues and they decided to hold the next round of Senior Commanders Meeting at an early date.

After the Galwan clash in 2020, several rounds of military and diplomatic talks have taken place to resolve the standoff. Disengagement at some border points did take place but by and large, there is an impasse on complete disengagement.

"As far as the current situation (in eastern Ladakh) is concerned, we have maintained continuous communication with the Chinese side both through diplomatic and military channels," MEA spokesperson Bagchi had said earlier. On the Chinese aggression which started in 2020, the Defence Ministry in its Year-End review had stated that unilateral and provocative actions by the Chinese to change the status quo by force, in more than one area on the LAC, have been responded to as an adequate measure. However, after a US General visiting India termed the Chinese activity level in eastern Ladakh as "eye-opening" the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MoFA) had stated that China and India have the will and capability of resolving the question of the border situation through dialogue and consultation.

Heart patients in India have access to advanced techniques such as HD IVUS

JALANDHAR, JULY 7

With the advancement of medical technologies in the country, Dr V. P. Sharma, Senior Interventional Cardiologist & Director at Shrimann Hospital, Jalandhar, urges heart patients in India to have better awareness and ask for many advanced technologies available today for superior cardiac care. Medical technologies are ever advancing and surgeons now advice cardiac procedures that are less invasive, less traumatic and reduce the chances of re- occurrence of cardiac events. So, stent deployment done under the guidance of Intravascular Ultrasound (IVUS), has better possibility of optimal result even in the most complex cases and better patient outcome. Referring to HD IVUS, Dr Sharma said "Intravascular Ultrasound (IVUS) allows us to see a coronary artery from the inside-out. This unique HD view provides us with critical clinical information that is not possible with routine imaging methods, such as coronary angiography, performed in the cath lab, or even non-invasive CT scans." Several studies conducted around the world also highlight that IVUS guided procedures are more accurate and even more cost effective. The superiority of HD IVUS lies in its three-dimensional detailed internal image transmission of all the layers of the blood vessel viz-a-viz angiography that offers only an external two-dimensional view. This enables the identification of the blockage, selecting the right stent size and confirming its right placement post-stenting to minimize future risk for the patient.

EDITORIAL

Disunity project

Unity in diversity' has become a cliché. It has lost its political traction and popular appeal. Not many wonder why. Perhaps we should. The case against 'unity in diversity' must be reckoned with. It lacks punch. It is too abstract. It takes thought, reflection and a willingness to look beyond the obvious to sense its sanity. That is too much to expect of the common man. In comparison, homogeneity, which seems conducive to unity, is more exciting to the masses. The jading of 'unity in diversity' must be read together with the activation of the masses. Unity is deceptive in relation to the mass. Individuals who comprise it are diverse. But they cease to be so in being constituted into a mass. A significant feature of our times is that public sentiments too are being massified. As a result, nonconformity to dominant views and versions is deemed offensive. This makes it easy to criminalise dissent. Almost everyone feels uneasy about dissenters. Dissenters themselves do. This tells us a lot about the demoralisation besetting the Opposition parties today.

The invocation of religion has played a major role in deepening the popular negativity against diversity. Homogeneity is native to religiosity. Consequently, every religious community is inherently intolerant of dissent. When religion and politics become a potent mix, the popular attitude to 'unity in diversity' gets stigmatised. This sullies secularism too. Today, secularism has been disenfranchised.

The pity of it is that this threat to a secular democracy is not being addressed with intellectual rigour. The 'why' and 'wherefore' of the change being engineered are not articulated.

Consider an aspect of this issue. The hallmark of the homogeneity-oriented rhetoric is intensity. It is this that lends irresistible rhetorical vehemence to the speeches of the prime minister. It would be interesting to reckon how Narendra Modi would sound if he were to advocate 'unity in diversity' in the prevailing climate. There is, however, a problem with intensity. Intensity demands exclusive focus. Respect for diversity is vexatious to those who thrive on intensity. It is naïve to expect them to treat any theme or issue objectively or fairly. Intensity thrives by creating an illusion: the illusion that there is nothing else of relevance in the given context, which is simply untrue.

Oldest groundwaters on earth contain energy sources for life

According to a new study, an international team of scientists has found groundwater that is 1.2 billion years old deep in a South African gold and uranium mine, adding to our understanding of how life is supported below the Earth's surface and how it may survive on other worlds.

The findings of the research were published in the journal 'Nature Communications'. "For the first time, we have insight into how energy stored deep in the Earth's subsurface can be released and distributed more broadly through its crust over time," said Oliver Warr, research associate in the Department of Earth Sciences at the University of Toronto and lead author of the study. "Think of it as a Pandora's Box of helium-and-hydrogen-producing power, one that we can learn how to harness for the benefit of the deep biosphere on a global scale."

"Ten years ago, we discovered billion-year-old groundwater from below the Canadian Shield - this was just the beginning, it seems," said Barbara Sherwood Lollar, professor in the Department of Earth Sciences at the University of Toronto and corresponding author. "Now, 2.9 km below the Earth's surface in Moab Khot-song, we have found that the extreme outposts of the world's water cycle are more widespread than once thought."

Uranium and other radioactive elements naturally occur in the surrounding host rock that contains mineral and ore deposits. These elements hold new information about the groundwater's role as a power generator for chemolithotrophic, or rock-eating, groups of cohabitating microorganisms previously discovered in the Earth's deep subsurface. When elements like uranium, thorium and potassium decay in the subsurface, the resulting alpha, beta, and gamma radiation has ripple effects, triggering what is called radiogenic reactions in the surrounding rocks and fluids. At Moab Khot-song, the researchers found large amounts of radiogenic helium, neon, argon and xenon, and an unprecedented discovery of an isotope of krypton - a never-before-seen tracer of this powerful reaction history. The radiation also breaks apart water molecules in a process called radiolysis, producing large concentrations of hydrogen, an essential energy source for subsurface microbial communities deep in the Earth that is unable to access energy from the sun for photosynthesis.

Due to their extremely small masses, helium and neon are uniquely valuable for identifying and quantifying transport potential. While the extremely low porosity of crystalline basement rocks in which these waters are found means the groundwaters themselves are largely isolated and rarely mix, accounting for their 1.2-billion-year age, diffusion can still take place.

"Solid materials such as plastic, stainless steel and even solid rock are eventually penetrated by diffusing helium, much like the deflation of a helium-filled balloon," said Warr. "

Our results show that diffusion has provided a way for 75 to 82 per cent of the helium and neon originally produced by the radiogenic reactions to be transported through the overlying crust."

The researchers stress that the study's new insights on how much helium diffuses up from the deep Earth is a critical step forward, as global helium reserves run out, and the transition to more sustainable resources gains traction. "Humans are not the only life-forms relying on the energy resources of the Earth's deep subsurface," said Warr. "Since the radiogenic reactions produce both helium and hydrogen, we can not only learn about helium reservoirs and transport but also calculate hydrogen energy flux from the deep Earth that can sustain subsurface microbes on a global scale."

Warr notes that these calculations are vital for understanding how subsurface life is sustained on Earth, and what energy might be available from radiogenic-driven power on other planets and moons in the solar system and beyond, informing upcoming missions to Mars, Titan, Enceladus and Europa.

Turkey renews extradition requests with Sweden, Finland

Turkey on Wednesday renewed its extradition requests for "terror suspects" with Finland and Sweden, following a deal it made with the Nordic countries for their NATO bid.

"Today we have renewed some requests that were rejected before and reminded them of some requests that were not responded to," Justice Minister Bekir Bozdag said in a televised interview on Haber Global broadcaster. Bozdag said the two countries previously did not respond to any of Turkey's extradition requests for "terror suspects" although they were in line with both the international and bilateral agreements.

"Within the framework of the agreement signed between Turkey, Sweden, and Finland at the latest NATO summit, a monitoring committee was established," he said. Their accession process to NATO was initially blocked by Turkey, which accused the Nordic countries of "supporting" anti-Turkey terrorist groups as they rejected Turkey's extradition requests for suspects affiliated with the outlawed Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) and the Gulen movement.

The PKK, listed as a terrorist organization by Turkey, the United States and the EU, has been rebelling against the Turkish government for more than three decades. The Gulen movement is led by and named after the U.S.-based Muslim preacher Fethullah Gulen, who is regarded by his followers as a spiritual leader. The Turkish government accused the movement of masterminding the 2016 failed coup in which at least 250 people were killed.

US backs Tibetans' right to choose their religious leaders

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken wished Dalai Lama on the occasion of his 87th birthday and extended support to the Tibetan community's efforts to preserve Tibet's distinct cultural traditions, including the ability to freely choose their religious leaders.

"I extend best wishes to His Holiness the Dalai Lama on the occasion of his 87th birthday today. His Holiness brings light to his fellow Tibetans and so many around the world by promoting peace, encouraging inter-faith harmony, and advocating for the preservation of Tibetan language and culture," Blinken said in a statement.

"The United States will continue to support His Holiness's and the Tibetan community's efforts to preserve Tibet's distinct linguistic, religious, and cultural traditions, including the ability to freely choose their religious leaders," he added.

Tibetans across the world on July 6 celebrated the 87th birthday of the 14th Dalai Lama. The Central Tibetan Administration (CTA) of the Tibetan government-in-exile organized the Dalai Lama's 87th birthday in Dharamshala, Himachal Pradesh.

Hundreds of Tibetans including monks, nuns, school students, and foreigner supporters gather at the main Buddhist temple, Tsuglagkhang. Since 2007, Chinese authorities have imposed regulations limiting the recognition of reincarnate lamas, which include most of the religious leaders in Tibetan Buddhism. These provisions specify that reincarnations may not be recognized without state approval and must be born within China's borders. According to Human Rights Watch (HRW), high-ranking incarnations must be selected using the "Golden Urn," an 18th-century Chinese lottery system that had scarcely been used by Tibetans until 2007, when the party mandated it as the only legal way to select top-ranking lamas. These regulations - imposed by a political party that denounces religion as delusion and implemented by a government that, in Tibet, bans its employees from religious practice - are widely understood as preparation for what officials call the "post-Dalai era." They are the legal groundwork for the Party's plan to capitalize on the future death of the current Dalai Lama, who is 87 and in exile, by appointing their choice as the next one. Chinese authorities have seen fit to use force, intimidation, and intrusive supervision to remove the Dalai Lama's influence over Tibetan Buddhism and enforce the state's absolute control over religion, according to HRW.

7 mln livestock died across drought-affected HOA countries

At least 7 million livestock have died across drought-affected Horn of Africa (HOA) countries, the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (UNOCHA) has disclosed.

"At least 7 million livestock, which pastoralist families rely upon for sustenance and livelihoods, have died across the region," the UNOCHA said in its latest humanitarian update for the Horn of Africa issued late Tuesday. As the impact of the ongoing drought on the region's livestock numbers mounted with the worsening emergency situation, more than 1.5 million livestock in Kenya, between

2.1 million and 2.5 million in southern and south-eastern Ethiopia, as well as 3 million more in Somalia have died, according to figures from the UNOCHA. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) had recently warned that the drought-induced livestock deaths are consequently affecting children's development as they have less access to milk, eventually negatively affecting their nutrition. It said malnutrition rates are rising across the three affected countries, in which more than 7.1 million children are currently acutely malnourished, including about 2 million children who are severely acutely mal-nourished. The UNOCHA also warned that the situation could further deteriorate as forecasts indicate that the October-December 2022 rainy season could also fail, leading to "an unprecedented and catastrophic situation, the likes of which has not been witnessed in the Horn of Africa in recent history." Amid the continued drought conditions, communities in the region are facing the threat of starvation following four consecutive failed rainy seasons in parts of Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia -- a climatic event not seen in at least 40 years. The UNOCHA said at least 18.6 million people are already experiencing high levels of acute food insecurity and rising malnutrition across Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia. This figure could increase to 20 million by September.

Amid the worsening drought, more than 11.6 million people cannot access enough water for drinking, cooking and cleaning across the region, including 4.4 million in Ethiopia, 3.9 million in Somalia, and 3.3 million in Kenya, according to the UNOCHA. While resilience-building efforts across the region have made important progress, the UNOCHA stressed that the frequency and severity of droughts in recent years, combined with the exceptionally prolonged nature of the 2020-2022 drought, have made it harder for families to recover between shocks.

The existing water deficits have been exacerbated by very high temperatures, which are forecasted to continue from June to September 2022.

Bath salts are food for your overworked body and mind

It is 9 pm and you are stepping inside your home, back from work. Or maybe you're just getting up from your home desk after a long day spent hunched over your laptop. Your mind is exhausted from the day's meetings and endless work calls, you are drained out of all energy, and your back is aching because of sitting in one position for hours. Kitu Pahooja, Founder, Laviche Bath Essentials, says, "Whether you are a journalist, digital marketer, sportsperson, teacher, fitness enthusiast, IT expert, manager, student, homemaker, mom, or a to-be-mom, the daily hustle gets your mind and body overworked by the end of the day. That's when your worn-out body needs some me-time of relaxation and relief."

An excellent way to heal and revitalize your drained out body is by dipping into a hot water bath packed with the miraculous benefits of bath salts. If you don't have a bathtub to drown your worries and pains in, you can still treat yourself to these wondrous therapeutic foods by dipping your feet in! Pahooja lists the benefits of bath salts below.

- Soothe Aches And Pains

Some jobs that require one to stand for long hours or strain the back and muscles while sitting in the same position cause joint pain over time. When your knees, toes, feet, back, or arms hurt, you can just soak some Epsom salt in hot water and rest in it for some time. "Epsom salt breaks into magnesium and sulfate that relax sore muscles, cure stiff joints, and reduce swelling. So if you just had a gym injury by lifting weights, knee stiffness due to running, or any kind of muscle pain, use the magical crystals of bath salts. Lemongrass bath salt is the best for sore muscles and body ache – its fragrance calms you as the Dead Sea and Himalayan salts treat muscle soreness," says Pahooja.

- Tuck You In Like A Baby

Bath salts are natural sleeping pills for your body. Instead of taking pills for insomnia, simply soak into a bath and add rose bath salts after a long and tiring day. The salt crystal absorbs magnesium into the body that gives you a good night's sleep, while the rose essential oil lifts your mood.

- Rejuvenate The Mind And Body

Giving yourself a salt soak is like meditating – the aroma of the ultra-relaxing essential oils calms the mind and the magnesium salt crystals energise the fatigued body. Take time off for a self-care Sunday each week to restores vibrancy and spirit into your overtired body, relieve physical stress and mental anxiety.

- Stimulate All Senses

As the magnesium salt enters your body, you feel a shock of vitality; every part of the body energises, from head to toe. A warm bath with salts also hydrates and moisturises your skin.

Pick pink Himalayan salts, Dead Sea salts, and lavender oil or extract to revive all the senses and leave your body feeling calm and peaceful, ready to take on tomorrow's challenges.

- Deepen Detoxification

Your skin also wears and stresses out every day. Bath salts exfoliate dead skin and nourish, hydrate and deeply detoxify your skin. They work amazingly well on sunburns too, leaving skin soft, silky and moisturised.

- Improve Blood Circulation

Bath salts relax your nerves by improving the circulation of blood throughout the body. Simply pair the natural healing qualities of these bath salts with aromatherapy. Light fragrant candles and read a good book while soaking into the bathtub. This will improve nerve functions and diffuse positivity into the dull corners of your mind and body.

- Stabilise Mood

Whether you are upset over a tiff with your colleague, your day didn't go as planned, or you have to work overnight for the next day's presentation, a short salt soak can be the answer to your mood swings and negativity. Sit back and relax in the bath to restore your mood and mental wellbeing!

Ajeet Bajaj continued to share the highs and lows of his extreme expeditions while drawing an analogy with life as he said, "At an individual level, we also all of us have to find our own Mount Everest. There is a feeling of inner joy and happiness when you make your dreams come true by overcoming boundaries you set for yourself." Lauding PGIMER as one of the best in the country, he urged the PGIMER fraternity to make this institute as "the best on the planet. This has to be our collective dream."
