Meet Hayer slams Amit Shah for defaming Pb in Gujarat polls

BUREAU
CHANDIGARH, NOV 16

Decrying Union Minister Amit Shah's bogus statement on law and order situation in Punjab, Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) senior leader and Punjab Cabinet Minister Gurmeet Singh Meet Hayer on Wednesday said that it is just a futile attempt by BJP to malign the Punjab's image to gain political mileage in the poll-bound Gujarat.

Addressing a press conference at Punjab Bhawan here, the Minister Meet Hayer said that BJP is unnerved with the rising popularity of AAP in Gujarat and they are using cheap and inimical tactics just to escape an imminent defeat in Gujarat elections. He stressed that the crime rate is far less in Punjab as compared to many BJP ruling states including Haryana and Uttar Pradesh.

Rejecting Union Minister Shah's statement categorically, the Punjab minister said that law and order situation is intact in the border state and state government under the doughty leadership of Chief Minister Bhagwant Mann is working dedicatedly to eradicate mafia and gangster-culture, which was patronized by successive governments during their decade-old regimes. Under this drive, as many as 402 gangsters have been arrested and 363 weapons have been recovered after AAP formed the state government in the state.

Delhi Court defers Minister Satyender Jain's bail plea till today

AGENCY
NEW DELHI, NOV 16

The CBI Court at Rouse Avenue on Wednesday deferred for tomorrow the pronouncement of the order on bail petitions of Delhi Minister Satyender Jain, two others in the Money Laundering case.

Enforcement Directorate (ED) arrested Satyender Jain on May 30.

Special CBI Judge Vikas Dhull on Wednesday said, the order copy is not ready for all three accused. It will take some time. Will pass the order tomorrow 2 pm.

The Court on November 11, had kept the order reserved after the conclusion of arguments from all sides.

During arguments, it was submitted on behalf of Jain that the investigation related to the applicant has been completed and a charge sheet has been filed. No case of money laundering is made out against the applicant.

Senior advocates N. Hariharan and Rahul Mehra submitted that it is alleged that a conspiracy for money laundering was hatched in 2010. At the time neither Jain was an MLA nor a Minister. So how could he hatch a conspiracy for money laundering? It was also submitted that as per the charge sheet the other accused have admitted that the money allegedly laundered belongs to them. Jain has nothing to do with the companies in question. On the other hand, the bail plea was opposed by the ASG for ED. The ASG S V Raju submitted that there are witnesses and materials sufficient to make out a case of money laundering against the accused. ASG submitted that the accused was involved in money laundering with other accused. He sent money to Kolkata-based companies and that money belong to Jain.

SC orders retrial in 2018 Kathua rape-murder, accused to be tried as adult

AGENCY
NEW DELHI, NOV 16

The Supreme Court on Wednesday set aside a Jammu and Kashmir Court order and ordered a fresh trial of the accused in the alleged 2018 rape-cum-murder of an eight-year-old girl from a nomadic community.

"The accused is to be tried as an adult and not a juvenile in the Kathua case," a bench of the Supreme Court, headed by Justice Ajay Rastogi and also comprising Justice J B Pardiwala, ruled.

The Supreme Court passed the judgement on the issue of juvenility of one of the accused, who was earlier held as a juvenile by the Chief Judicial Magistrate Court Kathua.

The Jammu and Kashmir government had claimed that the High Court had erroneously affirmed the order of a trial court holding the main accused to be a minor.

"The medical opinion regarding the age in absence of any other conclusive evidence should be considered to determine the age range of the accused.

"Whether the medical evidence can be relied upon or not depends on value of evidence. "Thus order passed by CJM Kathua is set aside and thus the accused is held not to be a juvenile at the time of crime," the apex court said, in its verdict.

According to the prosecution, the eight-year-old girl from the nomadic community of Bakerwal was allegedly kidnapped from Kathua's Rasana area on January 10, 2018, and was found dead on January 17 that year.

EDITORIAL

Forgotten luminary

Surendranath Dasgupta's first volume of A History of Indian Philosophy (1922) marked a watershed moment in the evolution of Indian thought. Unfortunately, neither Dasgupta nor his substantial body of writings is remembered outside the world of philosophers, academics and interested students. Of all of Dasgupta's work, Philosophy (published in five volumes), the last of which was barely completed on account of his sudden death in 1952, is the most renowned. Each volume was reviewed by major scholars of that time, such as Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, Louis Renou and F.W. Thomas.

Although the works of Indologists like Max Mueller and Vivekananda's speeches and writings had made the Western world take serious note of India's heritage, Dasgupta's was the most systematic and comprehensive, based on primary materials in Sanskrit, Pali and Prakrit, that was widely hailed in the academic world. There are many reasons why Dasgupta's work made a difference. He was among the foremost Sanskritists of his time. Besides, his deep knowledge of Western science and philosophy together with exposure to the stimulating environment of Cambridge equipped him ideally for the task. His logical analysis made him overtly critical of some of the established lines of thinking. He did not allow his personal emotions, mystical experiences and spiritual attainments to cloud his analytical thinking.

In the first volume of Philosophy are covered the Vedas, Brahmanas and the early Upanishads, the six systems of Hindu thought together with Buddhist and Jaina philosophy; the second volume deals with the Sankara School of Vedanta (continued from the first) and the philosophy of the Bhagavad Gita, among others; the third with the principal dualistic and pluralistic schools and philosophical ideations of some Puranas; the fourth with Indian Pluralism in the philosophical realm; and the last volume examines southern Saivism, Saiva philosophy in the Puranas and other important texts. Such was the single-handed, majestic sweep of Dasgupta the like of which was not attempted earlier or since. Dasgupta remained amazingly productive till his last day, though eye and heart ailments made him virtually bedridden for the last eight years of his life. Many of his other works like Yogaas Philosophy and Religion and Indian Idealism are considered influential, but his lasting fame rests on Philosophy. As a member of the Indian Education Service, a Professor of Philosophy at Presidency College, the principal of Government Sanskrit College and King George V Professor of Mental.

Congestion in traffic may contribute to lower birthweight

There is a wealth of data highlighting the negative health effects of vehicle-related air pollution, but there is little research on how bottleneck traffic, rather than overall traffic volume, can lead to negative health outcomes.

Now, a new study led by a Boston University School of Public Health (BUSPH) researcher has found that traffic-congestion">traffic congestion may be linked to lower birthweights.

Published in the journal Science Advances, the study found consistent associations between traffic delays and a nine-gram reduction in birthweight among infants born to parents who reside in areas with heavy traffic, such as highways or freeways. More than 11 million people live within 150 meters of highways, and the study results showed that up to 1.3 million pregnant people, representing 27 per cent of US births, may be exposed to high levels of traffic-congestion">traffic congestion annually.

"For years, we've had detailed models to predict air pollution, but these models largely omit traffic-congestion">traffic congestion - because it could not be measured at a large scale," says study lead and corresponding author Dr. Mary Willis, assistant professor of epidemiology at BUSPH. "If there are 10,000 vehicles on a road doing stop-and-go traffic, the air pollution concentrations, and likely composition, is very different compared to 10,000 vehicles at free-flow speeds. Our results show that there are likely health impacts specific to congestion, which are not included in most environmental risk assessments or cost-benefit analyses--and we think that those should start to be included in the conversation." Traffic delays have risen steadily across the country since 1982, and the researchers chose to examine potential links to low birthweight because it can lead to immediate and long-term consequences, such as difficulty breathing, cardiovascular disease, cognitive impairment, and premature mortality.

This study is the first to examine the impact of congestion on birth outcomes, in part due to challenges measuring traffic delays in large geographic areas. Willis and colleagues utilized almost 580,000 birth certificates in Texas and measured congestion levels through data from connected vehicles and devices that reflect actual driving volumes and speed. After controlling for background air pollution levels, transportation noise, and other environmental co-exposures, the results also indicated that mothers who lived closer to highways and freeways experienced slightly larger impacts from traffic jams, with 260,000 pregnancies occurring in the highest-congestion areas. While a nine-gram reduction in weight is a relatively small decrease, the researchers say this finding lends important implications for population and environmental health. "A nine-gram decrease alone isn't a clinically significant result on its own, but this result indicates that some sort of biological impacts may be happening, which will push some babies into a clinically relevant adverse impact of low birth weight," Willis says. "When you multiply that by 27 percent of all births being in high-congestion areas, that small decrease in birthweight does translate into a substantial potential impact at the population level." This data can also inform congestion-related policies and programs, which occur at the local level, unlike tailpipe emissions, which are primarily regulated at the federal level. The researchers note that stop-and-go traffic further increases air pollution through the extra wear on the brakes.

A simple 'thank you' among couples can go a long way

The findings of new research suggest that gratitude from one's partner may be a powerful tool for couples as it increases relationship satisfaction and commitment while protecting couples from the corrosive effects of ineffective arguing and financial stress.

Individuals who feel appreciated by their partners have better-functioning relationships that are more resilient to internal and external stressors, both in the moment when the appreciation is expressed and over the long term, said researcher Allen W. Barton, a professor of human development and family studies at the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign. Over a 15-month period, Barton's team examined the effects that expressed gratitude - conveying appreciation to one's partner - and perceived gratitude - feeling valued and appreciated by one's partner - had on the relationships of 316 African American couples.

"This study was really motivated to understand gratitude in relationships and if it can protect couples from challenges and hardships, be it negative communication or broader factors like financial strain," Barton said. "Much of the prior research looked at the relational effects of expressing gratitude, but one could make the argument that feeling appreciated by one's partner is important, too. And we tested both to see whether one was more influential for couple relationships than the other," Barton said.

The majority of those in the study were middle-aged and lived in small communities in rural Georgia. While most of the participants were employed, about 65 per cent of the couples had joint incomes that were less than 150 per cent of the federal poverty level and could be classified as working poor, Barton said. The total number of children residing with the participants ranged from one to eight, averaging three. The married couples had been together for about 10 years while the unmarried couples had been cohabiting for nearly seven years when the study began.

Aerobic exercise lowers risk of metastatic cancer

The probability of cancer metastatic spread can be reduced by aerobic exercise by 72 percent, according to a recent study. The amount of glucose (sugar) consumed by internal organs rises during intense aerobic exercise, according to the researchers, which decreases the amount of energy available to the tumour.

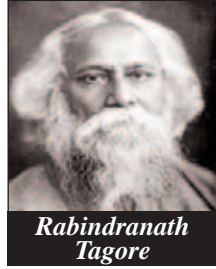

The study was led by two researchers from TAU's Sackler Faculty of Medicine: Prof. Carmit Levy from the Department of Human Genetics and Biochemistry and Dr. Yftach Gepner from the School of Public Health and the Sylvan Adams Sports Institute. Prof. Levy emphasizes that by combining scientific knowhow from different schools at TAU, the new study has led to a very important discovery which may help prevent metastatic cancer

- the leading cause of death in Israel. The paper was published in the prestigious journal Cancer Research and chosen for the cover of the November 2022 issue. Prof. Levy and Dr. Gepner: "Studies have demonstrated that physical exercise reduces the risk for some types of cancer by up to 35 percent. This positive effect is similar to the impact of exercise on other conditions, such as heart disease and diabetes. In this study we added new insight, showing that high-intensity aerobic exercise, which derives its energy from sugar, can reduce the risk of metastatic cancer by as much as 72 percent. If so far the general message to the public has been 'be active, be healthy', now we can explain how aerobic activity can maximize the prevention of the most aggressive and metastatic types of cancer."

The Land of the Exile

Mother, the light has grown grey in the sky; I do not know what the time is. There is no fun in my play, so I have come to you. It is Saturday, our holiday. Leave off your work, mother; sit here by the window and tell me where the desert of Tepan-tar in the fairy tale is.

Children with severe form of epilepsy should receive flu vaccine

According to a new study, due to the increased risk of seizures being brought on by an influenza infection, children with a severe form of epilepsy should receive the flu vaccine.

The risk of severe neurological symptoms and complications, such as worsening seizures, declining language and motor skills, and even death after contracting the flu, made the research, led by the Murdoch Children's Research Institute and the University of Melbourne, conclude that the safe administration of the seasonal influenza vaccine should be a priority in people with SCN1A-positive Dravet syndrome.

The choice for parents to vaccinate children with this syndrome is complicated, ed, according to paediatric neurologist Dr Katherine Howell of Murdoch Children's, because seizures can be brought on by both infection and immunisation. Despite the syndrome being linked to the high incidence of protracted seizures during infections, according to Dr Howell, the effects of influenza had not yet been researched.

Children with SCN1A-positive Dravet syndrome who had a confirmed flu infection at The Royal Children's and Austin Hospital participated in the study, which was written about in Neurology. Researchers discovered that 21 kids contracted the flu 24 times, with brain problems occurring in 88 per cent of those cases.

All presented to the hospital with 75 per cent recovering quickly but death or long-term brain complications occurred in one in five infections. Between them, they received 60 influenza vaccinations with most tolerating the vaccine well.

"Concerns about giving the flu vaccine and incomplete routine immunisations are common in this patient group due to the risk of seizures after vaccination," Dr Howell said. However, because this syndrome is also associated with a high risk of seizures during infections, it highlights the critical need to protect patients from the complications of vaccine-preventable infections like the flu. Our research highlights that the benefits of flu vaccines for these children far outweigh the risks of seizures being triggered following vaccination."

One in 15,000 children has the most prevalent severe form of hereditary epilepsy, SCN1A-positive Dravet syndrome.

Fraser Caddy, 4, of Melbourne, had seizures as a newborn and was later identified with SCN1A-Dravet syndrome.

Renae reported that her kid now receives an annual flu vaccination to avoid having lengthy seizures, which are typically brought on by an illness. Fraser needed four days in the hospital for treatment after having a two-hour seizure at the age of 11 months due to the virus.

"The seizures have gone from monthly to weekly, but they are much shorter now, resolving after a few minutes rather than a couple of hours," she said. But if he has a viral infection he will seize for as long as his temperature is high and may need a lot of medication and even intubation to get his seizures under control.

"It can take Fraser up to four days to get back to normal after he experiences a severe seizure so anything we can do to avoid him getting sick we will do."

Renae said all his influenza vaccines had been well-tolerated with no seizures.

"The research is reassuring for parents that it's beneficial for children with this condition to have the flu shot to try and avoid an onset of seizures caused by an infection, which are damaging and terrifying to watch," she said.

University of Melbourne Professor Ingrid Scheffer said the findings would change clinical practice. "Identifying safe strategies and strongly encouraging influenza vaccination in children and adults with SCN1A-Dravet syndrome is critical," she said.

"Prior to influenza vaccination, vaccine providers should review the child's regular anti-seizure medications and ensure a seizure management plan is in place.

The use of additional anti-seizure medications in the post-vaccination period, such as benzodiazepines, is now recommended to reduce the risk of seizures following a vaccine and is becoming routine practice."

Amazon's 'I Have Space' program enables individuals to unlock their entrepreneurial potential DELHI: As Amazon scales and expands its delivery network across Delhi, it continues to enable individuals to unlock their entrepreneurial potential, and create opportunities to expand their horizons through various last-mile delivery programs, including 'I Have Space' (IHS). Through the program, Amazon India partners with local stores and business owners to deliver products to customers within 2 to 4 kilometers radius of their store, allowing them to supplement their regular income. Launched in 2015, the program has more than 28,000 neighborhood and kirana partners in close to 420 towns and cities across its network in Delhi, including close to 3000 'I Have Space' (IHS) stores in Delhi, who have their own inspirational stories. One such story is that of Jyoti Jindal, who operates her coaching centre in Delhi and is also Amazon's 'I Have Space' partner. Jyoti is a mother, an entrepreneur, a domestic violence survivor, and one who is bursting with fervor. She is an example of a woman who has fought against all the odds to cultivate her individuality. Jyoti was only 18 years old when she got married. While everything seemed fine in the beginning, things took a turn for the worse. She started living a curtailed life and could hardly express herself with the fear of being judged by people. It took her 10 years to end her abusive marriage and move on with her life. In 2017, Jyoti moved back from Panipat to her hometown, Delhi, with her two daughters, who are 14 and 11 years old. She gathered herself for a fresh start and started looking for work opportunities. Jyoti took over Natick coaching centre in July 2017 from her sister, after she got married. While she had a regular set of students attending her classes, the earnings were not enough to meet her expenses. She also started a fitness service from her parents' home in 2018, which failed due to COVID-19. With failed tiffin business and limited income from her tuition classes, she was finding it difficult to meet the rising household expenses and education of her daughters.

"Obviously when you don't do well, people will have their opinion, which we respect. I understand people have different points of view. Being at the international level, I don't think we need to prove anything to anyone," Pandya told reporters here.

Vaughan had called India as "the most underperforming white-ball team in the history of world cricket" in his column for the Daily Telegraph.

"It's a sport, you keep trying to get better and eventually when the result is supposed to happen it will happen. There are things we need to work on, going forward we will rectify and work on it," he added.

India are all set to take on New Zealand in a three-match T20I and ODI series, starting with the first T20I here on November 18.

DUBAI, NOV 16

Indian middle-order batter Suryakumar Yadav saw a decline in his rating points, but nonetheless retained his top spot in the ICC T20I Player Rankings issued on Wednesday.

After superb performances in Super 12 of the ICC T20 World Cup, Suryakumar Yadav dethroned Pakistan's Mohammad Rizwan to become the top batter. But his rating points declined from 869 to 859 after a poor 14 against England in the semifinal, which India lost.

Suryakumar still finished the tournament with 239 runs in six innings at an average of 59.75, a strike rate of 189.68, the highest among batters and three half-centuries.

England batter Alex Hales continued to impress, smashing 86* off 47 balls against India in semis, which helped him jump 22 spots to reach number 12 position among batters.

He finished the tournament with 212 runs at an average of 42.40 and two fifties, as the second-highest batter for England. Ever since his comeback to the national side this year after 2019, he has scored 430 runs at an average of 30.71 and a strike rate of 145.27.

Babar Azam's match-winning half-century in the semis against New Zealand helped

There are plenty of superstars in Indian team: Kane Williamson

WELLINGTON : Saying that that his side looks forward to playing against India, New Zealand skipper Kane Williamson, commented on India's talent pool, ahead of his side's first T20I match against India in Wellington.

"Their side has been busy. It is natural that not everyone can do everything. Their depth is second to none. I have seen the talent these players have and there are plenty of superstars in that team," said Williamson. While focussing on his own team, Williamson spoke about pacer Trent Boult saying that he has been a huge part of the national side and he hopes to see him in Kiwis colours once again. India will be kickstarting its white-ball series against New Zealand with the first T20I set to take place in Wellington on Friday. Hardik will be leading the side in absence of senior stars like KL Rahul, Virat Kohli and Rohit Sharma in the shorter format. "Trent Boult has been a world-class player for us. He has been a huge part of our team. Hopefully, we will see him in New Zealand colours again. But it is a moving landscape, you make different decisions throughout your career," said Williamson in a media interaction ahead of the first match. Boult is not participating in both ODI and T20I series against Men in Blue. Back in August, Boult had requested New Zealand Cricket to release him from his central contract so that he could spend more time with his family while also making himself available for domestic leagues.
