Alibaba exits India, sells its entire stake holding in Paytm

AGENCY
NEW DELHI, FEB 10

In a block deal, 3.4 per cent equity (or 2.1 crore shares) of Paytm's parent company One97 Communications Ltd (OCL) have changed hands on Friday.

Sources in the know of the development say that Chinese multinational Alibaba has sold its entire stake in Paytm in today's block deal.

With this sale, Alibaba is no longer a stakeholder in Paytm. The company had sold around 3.1 per cent of 6.26 per cent equity in Paytm in January.

This latest deal almost completes Alibaba's exit from India since it had earlier sold its stakes in Zomato and BigBasket. The news will bring cheer to the market as it ends the Chinese stake holding in the homegrown Paytm.

Paytm's shares have been rallying in the last few days since it announced operating profitability in its Q3FY23 results with EBITDA before ESOP cost at Rs 31 crore, significantly ahead of its guidance of September 2023.

The fintech giant revenue from operations increased to Rs 2,062 crore (no UPI incentive recorded this quarter), a growth of 42 per cent on a yearly basis. This was followed by Paytm's robust operating update of January 2023 that it filed with the stock exchange on February 8.

The company has continued to witness sustained growth momentum in its key payments and lending business. Paytm strengthened its leadership in off-line payments with the deployment of 6.1 million devices while its average MTU at 89 million registered a 29 per cent growth for the month of January 2023.

ISRO launches SSLV-D2 rocket carrying three satellites

AGENCY
SRIHARIKOTA, FEB 10

Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) launched the Small Satellite Launch Vehicle - SSLV-D2 from the Satish Dhawan Space Centre at Sriharikota on Friday.

The launch has put ISRO's earth observation satellite EOS-07 and two co-passenger satellites Janus-1 and AzaadiSAT-2 into a 450 km circular orbit around the Earth.

According to ISRO, the second developmental flight of SSLV-D2 was scheduled at 09:18 hours IST from the first launch pad at SDSC SHAR in Sriharikota. SSLV-D2 is intended to inject the EOS-07, Janus-1 and AzaadiSAT-2 satellites into 450 km circular orbit, in its 15 minutes flight.

Soon after the launch, Mission Director, ISRO Vinod said "Janus 1 satellite separated. SSLV D2 mission accomplished."

The new vehicle was developed to capture the emerging small and microsatellite commercial market.

"SSLV-D2/EOS-07 Mission is accomplished successfully. SSLV-D2 placed EOS-07, Janus-1, and AzaadiSAT-2 into their intended orbits," the ISRO director said.

EOS-07 is 156.3 kg satellite designed, developed and realized by ISRO. New experiments include mm-Wave Humidity Sounder and Spectrum Monitoring Payload. Janus-1, a 10.2 kg satellite belongs to US-based firm Antaris . It is configured with three solid propulsion stages and a velocity terminal module. It is a 34 m tall, 2 m diameter vehicle having a lift-off mass of 120 t.

Meanwhile the 8.7 kg satellite AzaadiSAT-2 is a combined effort of about 750 girl students across India guided by Chennai-based Space Kidz India.

SSLV caters to the launch of up to 500 kg satellites to Low Earth Orbits on 'launch-on-demand' basis.

The space research body said it provides low-cost access to Space, offers low turn-around time and flexibility in accommodating multiple satellites, and demands minimal launch infrastructure.

The first test flight of SSLV ended in partial failure on August 9, 2022.

My govt committed to ensure justice in sacrilege and firing incidents: Mann

BUREAU
CHANDIGARH, FEB 10:

Asserting that the state government is fully committed to ensure justice in Behbal Kalan and Kotakpura incidents, the Punjab Chief Minister Bhagwant Mann on Friday appealed to the sangat to lift the roadblock at Behbal Kalan to avoid any inconvenience to commuters.

In an appeal to the people, the Chief Minister said that firing incidents at Behbal Kalan and Kotakpura along with Sacrilege of Sri Guru Granth Sahib ji at Bargari had bruised the psyche of every human being especially the Sikh sangat. He said that justice will prevail in both these incidents and the perpetrators of these heinous crimes will not be spared at any cost. Bhagwant Mann said that the state government is already leaving no stone unturned for this noble cause and those involved in these crimes will be soon behind the bars.

The Chief Minister said that due to Road blockage at Behbal Kalan a lot of inconvenience is being created to the common people. He said that this harassment of the masses should be avoided adding he appealed to sangat to lift the roadblock in larger public interest. Lashing out at Akalis and Congress, Bhagwant Mann said that both these parties have connived with each other to save the guilty of these incidents.

The Chief Minister said that, while the unfortunate incidents of desecration and firing on innocents took place during the Akali regime, the Congress actively shielded the perpetrators of these crimes during its tenure. Bhagwant Mann further said that the Akali-Congress, nexus that was shielding the accused, had been broken with the AAP Government coming into power, which is already making strenuous efforts to nab the perpetrators. He said that his government is firmly committed to bring the guilty to book and ensure justice in both these cases to assuage the sentiments of the people.

SC dismisses PIL seeking complete ban on BBC operations in India

NEW DELHI: The Supreme Court on Friday dismissed a PIL seeking complete ban on the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) and BBC India from operating from Indian territory in wake of airing the documentary titled, 'India: The Modi Question' relating to the 2002 Gujarat riots. A bench of Justices Sanjiv Khanna and MM Sundresh said that the plea was misconceived and the court cannot impose censorship. "Completely misconceived, how can this be argued also? You want us to put complete censorship... What is this?" the bench asked from the petitioner's counsel. Hindu Sena president Vishnu Gupta sought a ban on BBC operations in India alleging that it was taking an "anti-India" position. The PIL also sought direction from the NIA to initiate a probe against the anti-India and anti-Indian-government reporting/documentary films/short films including its employee journalist in India .

However, 2 per cent random testing will continue for international travellers at airports. In the last update, based on the increasing trajectory of COVID-19 and circulation of mutant variants of the SARS-CoV-2 virus in some countries, the Ministry had mandated requirements of pre-departure COVID-19 testing and uploading of Self-Health Declaration on the Ministry of Civil Aviation's 'Air Suvidha' Portal," the letter reads.

The attack on the Chandigarh Police is the beginning of terrorism in Pb: Shandilya

SHIV KUMAR SHARMA
AMBALA, FEB 10

National President of the Anti-Terrorist Front of India Viresh Shandilya said that the attack on the Chandigarh Police was not by miscreants but by terrorists. And on February 4, his Anti-Terrorist Front India submitted a memorandum to the Governor of Punjab, Banwarilal Purohit, stating that the Qaumi Insaaf Morcha in Mohali should be immediately removed as it was demanding the release of the terrorists. And the attack on the Chandigarh Police has become a symbol of the return of militancy in Punjab and Chandigarh. When the Chandigarh Police is in danger, the entire country is in danger. even though the Chandigarh Police registered a case under 307. But this registered case will not make any difference because Khalistan, Jarnail Singh Bhindranwala supporters, Amritpal supporters, and gangsters are involved with Qaumi Insaaf Morcha. To save Punjab and the country, such people will now have to give orders for firing the police to Home Minister Amit Shah. Terrorists are involved in Qaumi Insaaf Morcha, and Qaumi Insaaf Morcha wants to fight itself with the law, with the constitution, and with the Indian tricolour on the basis of arms. The National President of the Anti-Terrorist Front of India, Viresh Shandilya, said that now the people of the country will have to wake up. Terrorism has spread in Punjab, which is not visible to the public. False cheer

If you read India's Economic Survey for the year 2022-23, particularly its chapter on agriculture and food management, you would perhaps be thrilled by its 'all is well' tone. Sectoral growth has been at an all-time high; farmers are buoyed by the Narendra Modi-led government's programmes; from crop productivity, production practices and a mechanisation boost to new market opportunities, the sector is ticking all the boxes to make farmers truly happy. At least, that is the survey's tone and tenor.

But if you travel across the dusty countryside, you see the exact opposite of that sentiment. Old challenges are mounting and farmers are saddled with newer headaches. The slogan of doubling farmers' incomes has fallen flat. While we have seen the number of Farmer Producer Organisations increase in the last three years as a result of the Centre's push, very few of these new institutions show signs of breaking even or aiding farmer members. Floating a company is one thing, making it viable, quite another. You need powerful people at the right places to make that happen. Just ask Adani.

Every year, India produces more from the same unit of land with higher inputs — which means a kilogramme of wheat, lentils, millets or vegetables consumes more fertilisers and energy each year. It is true that there is a growing trend of small and marginal farming families rearing small ruminants to support their income, but without fodder, vaccines or market support from the State. All of it is driven by the individual farmer in his or her fragile capacities.

Then, you read the budget for 2023-24 — the last full budget presented by the Modi 2.0 government — and all you see, once again, are slogans. In the last nine years of this regime, there has been a push for quick-fix solutions and lofty slogans devoid of sustained thinking for the long-term robust revival of a broken rural economy or pragmatic economics. As M.S. Swaminathan, the father of India's green revolution, suggested in the voluminous reports he submitted as chair of the National Commission for Farmers over a decade ago, sectoral growth is not equal to farmers' income. There is more than the income spiral: we need to fix a hundred verticals — from soil to market.

In that sense, the Modi government and, in turn, the country wasted a decade of its sweeping majority in Parliament, to give a new deal to the countryside by helping the states — after all, states are the custodians of the agricultural sector. This would have brought the Centre's intentions to fruition.

How artificial sweetener becomes wastewater tracer

Acesulfame is a sugar substitute found in sugar-free beverages and meals. Because it cannot be metabolised in the human body, the sweetener is excreted in wastewater and remains essentially intact even in sewage treatment plants.

According to a new study from the University of Vienna, the sweetener's persistence varies with temperature, much as the concentration of the sweetener in wastewater varies with the seasons. The environmental geosciences team investigated how seasonal oscillations in groundwater flow might be used to trace groundwater flows. Because sugar residues end up in drinking water, acesulfame can be used to determine the source and composition of our water. The research was just published in the journal Water Research.

The sugar substitute acesulfame is one of the most commonly used sweeteners in Europe. It is almost 200 times sweeter than sugar and temperature-stable, making it suitable for sugar-free baking and for sweetening most diet lemonades. Because the human body does not metabolise the substance, it ends up in wastewater when consumed in large quantities and remains there even after treatment, but in fluctuating concentrations.

The new study by the University of Vienna shows that the substance is broken down to varying degrees over the year depending on the temperature.

"For a long time, it was assumed that the potassium salt of acesulfame is not degraded at all in wastewater treatment plants. This is still true, but only in the cold season," said Thilo Hofmann, deputy head of the Centre for Microbiology and Environmental Systems Science at the University of Vienna, adding, "There were already initial indications that at least partial biodegradation takes place in summer. We can prove this in our study and systematically show for a longer period of time how the concentration of the sweetener in the water changes with the seasons."

Acesulfame is a widely used indicator of wastewater discharges into surface waters and groundwater: since this sweetener is not completely degraded both in wastewater treatment plants and in the environment -- after it has been discharged into water bodies with the treated wastewater -- detection of the substance in water indicates that and how much-treated wastewater has entered groundwater, rivers or lakes. "If you follow the traces of the substance, you can ultimately trace flow paths of the wastewater and its mixing with groundwater," Hofmann said. With the knowledge of seasonal fluctuations in the degradation of the substance, acesulfame becomes an even more meaningful tracer.

"Our study shows that the seasonally fluctuating concentration of acesulfame can be used to better visualise and understand the processes in the subsurface, i.e. groundwater flows," said Hofmann. Wastewater components in drinking water can be recorded as well as the flow velocity of the groundwater and the mixing ratios of groundwater and river water. The environmental geoscientists evaluated river and groundwater samples that were collected regularly over eight years in a pre-alpine catchment. The research team linked their analyses to computer models that calculate water flows in the subsurface. "Such computer models are the key to risk prevention, because they can be used to understand how much river water and how much groundwater end up in the population's drinking water and how to optimise the operation of waterworks," added the head of the research group. The sweetener acesulfame thus lays a tracer trail from wastewater to river and groundwater and finally to our drinking water.

"The fact that acesulfame is not degraded is basically a good thing for us hydrogeologists because we can draw valuable information from it," says Hofmann. He adds: "However, this fact also makes us aware of our lifestyle being reflected in the wastewater and thus also in the drinking water: The sugar substitute we consume ends up back in our drinking water - albeit heavily diluted, of course," Hofmann said.

New way to rearrange store products could boost impulse buying

A data-driven strategy for rearranging merchandise on a regular basis allows merchants to improve new shop layouts based on customer familiarity with where their favourite things used to be.

The Washington State University-led study uses past consumer transactions to give brick-and-mortar establishments a taste of the personalised shopping experience that online merchants like Amazon use to encourage impulse purchases.

"What's new here is that we designed our model so that customers walking down an aisle they normally peruse will notice products they will likely be interested in based on associations with what was there before," said Chuck Munson, a professor in the WSU Carson College of Business and corresponding author of a study appearing in Expert Systems with Applications. "Our analysis shows that if you are a store that likes to rearrange periodically this would be a smart way to do it."

Gihan Edirisinghe, study lead author and a former WSU PhD student now at Western Kentucky University, came up with the idea for the research on a Saturday evening trip to Walmart a few years ago. As he and his wife perused the aisles, they quickly realized something strange was afoot. "We found ourselves walking the aisles we normally do but all our stuff had moved," he said. "So, I started wondering if the Walmart folks had put a lot of thought into the rearrangement. When I got home, I checked the literature and it turned out there was a lot of research on one-time store rearrangements but literally nothing data-driven on the best way to periodically rearrange products." Edirisinghe discussed his findings with Munson and the two researchers decided to tackle the knowledge gap. They developed and tested a product allocation model that uses data mining techniques to extract profitability and product affinity details from tens of thousands of real customer transactions contained in the Microsoft database 'Foodmart.'

Their model then uses a three-step process to determine ideal product placement for stores that periodically rearrange their wares. First, it identifies a store's most profitable products so they can be placed in highly visible locations.

Next, it determines which items tend to be purchased together so they can be placed in a way that customers will notice something interesting next to a planned purchase.

Universities in Afghanistan on verge of closure

Most of the universities in Afghanistan are on the verge of closure as several face economic challenges after the Taliban's ban on education for females in the country. According to the union representing public and private universities, several institutions have ceased operations as a result of economic difficulties. 35 universities will be shut down, according to Union officials, if the Islamic Emirate does not change its mind about women's education, TOLONews reported. "In a survey that we have done, 35 private universities due to economic challenges, cannot operate," said Mohammad Karim Nasiri, the media officer responsible for the union. The union added that most of the universities face economic challenges. In the meantime, a private institution in Afghanistan declared in a statement that it would be sold owing to financial difficulties, TOLONews reported. At the university, some female students demanded that the Islamic Emirate change its mind about allowing women to attend classes. Time and again, female students in the country have called on the Taliban to reverse the ban on the education of women in the country and open the gates of schools.

POEM

The Palace of Art

I built my soul a lordly pleasure-house,
Wherein at ease for aye to dwell. I said, "O Soul, make merry and carouse, Dear soul, for all is well." A huge crag-platform, smooth as burnish'd brass, I chose. The ranged ramparts bright
From level meadow-bases of deep grass
Suddenly scaled the light.

Sea turtles can adapt to rapidly changing world due to surprise changes in genes

Around 100 million years ago, a group of land-dwelling turtles took to the oceans, eventually evolving into the sea turtles that we know today. However, the genetic foundations that have enabled them to thrive in oceans throughout the world have remained largely unknown.

In research recently published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, an international team of 48 researchers led by the University of Massachusetts Amherst in collaboration with the Leibniz Institute for Zoo and Wildlife Research and the Vertebrate Genome Project revealed an incredibly detailed genetic map of two species-- green and leatherback turtles--which is packed with surprises that might hold the key to their survival in a rapidly changing world. A single species' genome contains the genetic set of instructions used to build that species, and sequencing any species' genome is an enormous amount of work. This is akin to translating an entire library into a language that scientists can read and has only been possible in the last few decades. For green sea turtles, a "draft" genome, including approximately 100,000 pieces of genetic information, has been available since 2013, "but" says Blair Bentley, a postdoctoral researcher in environmental conservation at UMass Amherst and the lead author of the new research, "these pieces of genetic information weren't precisely mapped out. It was as if you walked into a library and found 100,000 pages lying on the floor." To more precisely catalogue the turtles' genomes, the international team turned to new technologies including long read sequencing--a technique recently named 2022 Method of the Year by the journal Nature. This has made it possible to sequence genomes from virtually any living species and to do so with far more accuracy than was previously possible. Sequencing of the turtles' genomes was performed both at Rockefeller University, in the Vertebrate Genome Laboratory (VGL), led by Erich Jarvis, who chairs the VGP, and Olivier Fedrigo who is director of the VGL, and at the Max Planck Institute of Molecular Cell Biology and Genetics by Eugene Myers--all coauthors on the new study. "These advances allowed us to do the equivalent of shelving everything according to the Dewey Decimal System so that we can begin to understand how everything fits together," says Bentley. Once Bentley and his co-authors had correctly organized and annotated the genetic data, they started finding surprises.

The first is that, though greens and leatherbacks diverged from a common ancestor about 60 million years ago, their genomes are remarkably similar. Similar, but not the same. "It's those differences that make them unique," says Lisa Komoroske, professor of environmental conservation at UMass and one of the paper's two senior authors. And it's those differences that may hold the key to each species' long-term survival, especially considering that populations of both greens and leatherbacks have seen precipitous declines due to human activity.

It turns out that green turtles have evolved more genes dedicated to immunity, suggesting an immune system that is better prepared for new pathogens, as well as more olfactory receptors--they have better senses of smell. The leatherback genome also shows that they lower genetic diversity and have historically had lower population levels.

Balance Your Metabolism With Food

Nutritionist Dr Rohini Patil details how just a few simple lifestyle changes could reset your metabolism It is becoming more widely accepted that your health and what you eat are inextricably linked. You can nourish your body each day to achieve optimal health by learning which foods are best for you. Because there is no such thing as a one-size-fits-all approach to health, personalised nutrition is required for the best results. A healthy, balanced metabolism is necessary for your health and vitality. Metabolic disorders, which can also lead to diabetes and heart disease, frequently have unwelcome weight gain as a side effect. A simple change in your diet can return your metabolism to its original healthy starting point – the ultimate body reset.

Here's What A Healthy Metabolism Does For You...

- Improves your resilience in daily life and work
- Rebalances your pH levels
- Helps you reach and maintain your goal weight
- Provides renewed energy and general well-being; and
- Improves your quality of life

Here are a few tips for balancing your metabolism with food: Eat A Varied, Nutrient-Dense Diet A nutrient-dense diet is one that includes a variety of foods in the right amounts and ratios to meet the body's needs for calories, proteins, minerals, vitamins and other nutrients. A diet that includes a variety of fruits, vegetables, whole grains and lean protein sources can help support a healthy metabolism. Foods that are high in nutrients are low in bad fats, sodium, sugar and starches, as well as high in minerals and vitamins and low in calories. Your body requires vitamins and minerals, which are referred to as micronutrients. Stay Hydrated Drinking enough water is important to maintain a healthy metabolism. Aim for 8 x 8 ounces (236 ml) of water per day. Water is essential to life, and it also happens to be one of the simplest ways to speed up metabolism. Your metabolism can increase by up to 25% for almost an hour after drinking water. It means that if you consume a few cups of water every hour, your metabolism will remain at its optimal level throughout the day. The body burns fat when water is consumed. Even mild dehydration can cause a 3% reduction in metabolic rate. So, drink up and lose weight. Don't Skip Meals Skipping meals can disrupt your metabolism and might lead to overeating later on. Try to eat regular, balanced meals throughout the day. Long-term fasting can significantly slow down your metabolism, but a brief fast, such as intermittent fasting, or one missed meal should not have a negative effect on your metabolism overall. When you don't eat for several hours, your body enters starvation mode, or a fasted state, where your brain signals your body to slow down certain processes in order to conserve energy and burn fewer calories. As a result, the weight loss you were hoping to experience might be delayed, and you will probably put on weight as soon as you resume your regular eating habits.

He said that if Sandeep Garg continues his noble work in this way, he can become the MLA of the Ladwa constituency in the coming times. He said that big leaders come before the elections and promise that they will do this or that for the development of the village, but after taking votes, neither the winning candidate nor the losing candidate is visible. He stated that social worker Sandeep Garg currently does not have a job and is engaged in continuous service to the people of the Ladwa area through his personal work; he runs many sewing centers, medical vans, ambulances, and so on, which in itself is a huge task for the people of Ladwa constituency.

Aadhaar centers, which were closed for two years, have started up again

NIRMAL RADAUR, FEB 10

After the intervention of Kurukshetra MP Nayab Saini, the Aadhaar center, which had been closed for almost two years, was reopened on Friday. The municipal office has established an Aadhaar center. Here now the work of Aadhaar updation will be done regularly. With the re-opening of the Aadhaar Center, people will no longer have to travel long distances for Aadhaar-related work. When Kurukshetra MP Naib Saini reached Radaur last week, the workers had raised the problem of the closure of the Aadhaar centre for a long time before him and former minister Karandeve Kamboj. On that day, Member of Parliament Naib Saini asked the District Deputy Commissioner to take cognizance of the solution to this problem as soon as possible. Due to his efforts, the Aadhaar centre has been made operational today. BJP Mandal General Secretary Dhanpat Saini, Ashok Gumber, and former Mandal President Vinod Singla have expressed their gratitude to MP Naib Saini and former Minister Karandeve Kamboj. Dhanpat Saini and Ashok Gumber said that the Aadhaar centre running in Radaur was closed about two years ago. Due to this, people were forced to take a long detour of about 10 kilometres for work related to the Aadhaar card. Every day, hundreds of people from the area used to go to Ladwa or Gumthala for this work. Many times he had to make two to three rounds for a single task.

anniversary. P. K. Rosy was born on 10 February 1903. She was the first actress in Malayalam cinema. She acted in J. C. Daniel's directorial 'Vigathakumaran' (The Lost Child). She was born 'Rajamma' in 1903 to a Pulaya family in Nandankode, Trivandrum. Her father passed away while she was very young, leaving her family in extreme poverty, according to her living relatives. She worked as a grass cutter when she was younger. She also had a strong interest in the arts, which her uncle nurtured by helping her find a music and acting instructor. She also routinely attended the neighbourhood school of performing arts to study Kakkirasi Nattakam, a style of Tamil folk theatre based on tales of Siva and Parvati's arrival on Earth as nomads and performed in a combination of Tamil and Malayalam. Acting was not traditionally regarded as a woman's vocation in those days, and women who thought acting was a serious career were deemed licentious or 'loose'.

Rosy's passion for acting seems to have outweighed any worries she may have had about what people would think of her. Many people assert that her family changed her name from Rajamma to Rosamma after converting to Christianity. In her first movie 'Vigathakumaran', she portrayed the Nair woman Sarojini. A Youtube video that goes by the name 'Rosiyude Kadha - Part 2 (The story of the first Heroine of Malayalam Film Industry)' has revealed that the fact that a Dalit woman played a Nair woman in 'Vigathakumaran' infuriated members of the Nair community. Many prominent people in the film industry at the time, including the well-known attorney Madhoor Govindan Pillai, declined to attend the Vigathakumaran premiere if Rosy was going to be physically present. The audience hurled rocks at the screen after a moment in which the main character kissed a flower in her hair. Daniel, the director, declined to personally invite her to the Capitol Theatre in Thiruvananthapuram's opening night out of concern for the reaction. Rosy had gone anyhow, but those who were boycotting the event had her see a second performance.
