OPINION

Editorial Homecomings

ast week, I visited Bangalore for three days after many years and it felt like coming home. It's interesting how little it takes to confect a sense of belonging. My claim to Bangalore is that my father went to college there and his father worked for the princely state of Mysore. More importantly, members of the South Indian half of my extended family are scattered all over the city, from Malleshwaram to Koramangala. From this thin material, I've managed, over the years, to work up a sense of ownership.

One way to own a city is to return, time and again, to the same places because a scene of homecoming needs props. In Bangalore, I invariably have a beer and a mutton cutlet at Koshy's before walking down Church Street to Blossom, the many-storied second-hand bookshop, which has the most comprehensive collection of science fiction I have ever seen under a single roof. Older readers of science fiction (like me) used to fancy themselves as loyalists of a marginal genre. Now that SF has gone mainstream, thanks to mostly bad movies and worse shows, that beleaguered sense of belonging is hard to come by, but being surrounded by old paper-backs by Robert Heinlein, Ursula Le Guin, Brian Aldiss and Larry Niven is like being young again. That too, in a pathetic way, is a kind of homecoming.

The next stop in my itinerary is the Central Tiffin Room in Malleshwaram where I eat a benne masala dosé (not 'dosa' in Bangalore) that leaks butter. The idea that something called a masala dosé counted as local fare in Bangalore used to trouble my authenticity-seeking Delhi mind. I had assumed that the 'masala' in the masala dosé was a North Indian vulgarisation of that austere original - the plain dosé. I know better now. Given that masala's etymology derives from Arabic, there is no reason why the term couldn't have directly entered Kannada via coastal Karnataka's proximity to the Arabian Sea. Had that linguistic borrowing not happened, I might eas-ily have been eating a parivyay or gandhadravyam dosé, since these, I'm told, are the equivalent terms in Sanskrit for masala.

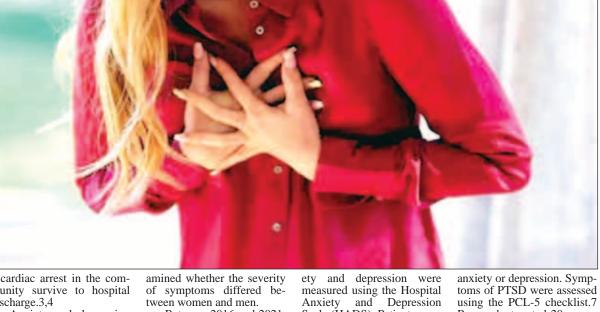

I met an old friend at a place called the Airlines Hotel. It took me a while to work out where to go because not only did it have nothing to do with an airline but it also wasn't a hotel, even in the desi sense of the term i.e. an indoor restaurant. It was, instead, an outdoor version of the Central Tiffin Room. We sat in an expansive yard under the interlocking canopies of several magnificent trees of the sort you never see in Delhi and ate, what else, benne masala dosé and drank filter coffee.

Women are more likely to have long-term anxiety

A ccording to a study presented today at ESC Acute Cardio-Vascular Care 2023, a scientific meeting of the European Society of Cardiology, more than 40% of women report anxiety four months following a cardiac arrest, compared to 23% of males (ESC)

'Cardiac arrest occurs with little or no warning and it's common to feel anxious and low afterwards," said study author Dr. Jesper Kjaergaard of Rigshospitalet -Copenhagen University Hospital, Denmark, adding, "After the initial shock and confusion, patients and their families have an abrupt change in their way of life, with medical investigations to determine the cause of cardiac arrest and in some cases diagnosis of a condition requiring treatment. This may add to the stress and anxiety. Our study indicates that women are more affected psychologically and could be targeted for extra support."

Cardiac arrest causes one in five deaths in industrialised countries.2 The heart unexpectedly stops pumping blood around the body and if flow is not restored quickly, the individual passes out and dies within 10 to 20 minutes. Less than 10% of people who have a cardiac arrest in the community survive to hospital discharge.3,4

Anxiety and depression are frequent after critical illness and are strongly associated with reduced quality of life in patients5 and relatives.6 This study assessed the prevalence of anxiety, depression and post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) in cardiac arrest survivors and examined whether the severity of symptoms differed between women and men.

Between 2016 and 2021, the study enrolled 245 patients who had a cardiac arrest in the community and were admitted to hospital in a coma. Some 18% of participants were women. Psychological symptoms were assessed during a four-month follow up appointment. Anxiety and depression were measured using the Hospital Anxiety and Depression Scale (HADS). Patients gave a score of 0 to 3 for how often or strongly they experienced 14 items such as "I get sudden feelings of panic", for a total of 0 to 21 for anxiety and 0 to 21 for depression. Scores between 8 to 10 indicate borderline anxiety or depression while 11 or higher indicates (3.3 and 6.1, respectively), compared to men (2.6 and 4.5, respectively). Anxiety scores of 8 or more were observed in 43% of women and 23% of men. Looking at the anxiety results in more detail, 23% of women had a score of 8 to 10 compared with 11% of men, while 20% of women scored 11 or more compared with 12% of men. Women had significantly higher levels of PTSD compared with men (median score 33 vs. 26, respectively). In both men and women, anxiety was sig-nificantly correlated to PTSD symptoms.

Dr. Kjaergaard said: "The findings confirm our experience in clinical practice that the psychological effects of cardiac arrest persist for months.

Anxiety was frequent, particularly in women. Our results highlight the need for long-term follow up of cardiac arrest survivors to identify and treat mental health issues. Patients should be encouraged to tell their healthcare professional about anxiety, depression and stress related to the cardiac arrest. Future studies are needed to investigate whether talking to a professional can help alleviate psychological symptoms.'

Endless Time

Time is endless in thy hands, my lord. There is none to count thy minutes. Days and nights pass and ages bloom and fade like flowers. Thou knowest how to wait. Thy centuries follow each other perfecting a small wild flower. We have no time to lose, and having no time we must scramble for a Rabindranath Tagore chance. We are too study found that housing is also important before disasters happen: People with homes not meeting federal quality classifications and those who are housing insecure tend to be less prepared to face natural calamities.

The study was pub-lished recently in the journal Global Environmental Change. "Housing security and quality are vital for people to be better pre-pared for disasters," said Smitha Rao, lead author of the study and assistant professor of social work at The Ohio State Universi-

Results showed that households facing housing insecurity - those behind on their payments for rent, mortgage or utilities - scored lower on a scale of disaster preparedness than those that were housing secure - even if the occupants had similar income and education. "Clearly, a precarious housing situation can make it harder for families to be ready when disaster strikes," Rao said .. The importance of preparedness has never been greater in the United States. Between 2011 and 2019, the United States experienced 119 weather and climate disasters with damages exceeding $1 billion. While concerns around disasters and extreme weather events have risen, fewer than 40% of Americans have an emergency plan in place, research shows. This study was designed to examine how a variety of social and structural vulnerabilities - from socioeconomic and minority status, and household composition to housing quality and housing insecurity - were related to disaster preparedness, Rao said.

Further, these vulnerabilities do not occur in isolation and some of these. when taken together, often have compounding consequences, she said. Data for the study came from the 2017 American Housing Survey, conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

'Health & Place'.

The study has explored the relationship between maternal education and children's health in the rural-urban context in India. Their aim was to find out whether a mother's educational attainment influences the underfive mortality rate between rural and urban areas in India, and how this has changed over the last three decades. (The under-five mortality rate is the probability of a child dying between birth and its fifth birthday).

"Understanding how education affects under-five mortality is crucial for understanding future population dynamics in developing countries," notes K.C., who lead the Multidimensional Demographic Modeling Research Group of the IIASA Population and Just Societies Program.

In their study the researchers analyzed five rounds of the Indian National Family Health Survey (NFHS I-V) conducted between 1992 to 1993, and 2019 to 2021. The under-five mortality rate was calculated using data from a questionnaire, which collected detailed information about birth history data among women, especially the date of birth and survival status of each live birth, and the age at death of each deceased live birth. The questionnaire also provided additional information such as age, education, religion, caste, and reproductive behaviors. The data gathered was then fed into a hazard model to analyze predictors of under-five mortality.

The results show that under-five mortality remained higher in rural India across the five study surveys, which may be attributed to poor socioeconomic and healthcare conditions that prevailed there.

However, after controlling for socioeconomic and maternal health predictors, the earlier surveys show a higher risk of underfive deaths in urban areas that have converged in recent years, resulting in no significant difference between rural and urban areas. Increasing maternal education, and especially secondary education, was found to reduce the risk of under-five deaths across the surveys

New mining technology uses CO2 to control critical minerals: Study study has found that a mining technology can reduce the amount of energy needed to access critical minerals vital for modern energy technologies and capture greenhouse gases along the way.

The study was published in the journal, 'US

Department of Energy'. A mining technology pioneered by re-searchers at the Bureau of Economic Geology at The University of Texas at Austin could reduce the amount of energy needed to access critical minerals vital for modern energy technologies and capture greenhouse gases along the way.

Transitioning the world's energy to technologies and sources with low-carbon emissions will take, in part, tremendous amounts of lithium, nickel, cobalt and other critical minerals that exist in low concentrations in the Earth's crust. Mining those elements takes much energy and produces waste, which can negatively affect the environment and create significant amounts of greenhouse gas emissions such as carbon dioxide (CO2). This research could turn these emissions into a tool by using CO2 to weaken the rock containing critical minerals, reducing the amount of energy needed for mining. The ultimate goal is to significantly reduce the emissions produced during mining by storing them safely in the rocks, and potentially even make mining carbon negative -

storing more carbon than is produced - by piping in and storing CO2 emissions from other industrial operations

This CO2 storage is possible because of the way ultramafic rocks, which typically contain critical minerals, react with carbon. The CO2 chemically reacts with the rock to mechanically break its structure, making the minerals easier and less energy-intensive to mine. This reaction also partially turns the rock into limestone, incorporating the carbon dioxide into the mineral structure and storing it permanently.

'Mining processes create a lot of CO2 as a byproduct," said Estibalitz Ukar, a research scientist at the Bureau of Economic Geology at the UT Jackson School of Geosciences, adding, 'If you can capture what is produced at the mine, then you can come up with a low-emission operation, which is good, but we want to use the CO2-reducing properties of ultramafic rocks to help eliminate even more CO2."

Ukar is leading a team of scientists that is working to perfect the mining technology, which is supported by a $5 million grant from the U.S. Department of Energy Advanced Research Projects Agency-Energy. The three-year project will work to refine the mining method in the lab for two years before trying a full-scale field test in partnership with Canada Nickel Company. The field test is planned to take place in one of 20 newly discovered ore bodies near the U.S.-Canada border that are forecast to be an important new source of critical minerals in North America.

The project would also make low-grade deposits more economically viable, an important step in increasing the available supply of domestically produced critical minerals.

The demand is high now, but we will see a huge increase in the next three to five years as we transition into lower-emission technologies, such as electric vehicles," Ukar said, adding, "We need to meet the demand by finding creative ways to reduce costs and emissions, find new sources of metals, and make the mines of the future more sustainable. And we need to do it fast.

The project is part of the Mining Innovations for Negative Emissions Resource Recovery program, a new initiative that aims to develop marketready technologies that will increase domestic supplies of critical elements required for the transition to low-carbon or carbon-free energy.

Rahul Gandhi on bail, Congress busy in misleading people: BJP

DINESH AGARWAL SHIMLA, MAR 26

BJP state president and MP Suresh Kashyap, state incharge Avinash Rai Khanna and co-in-charge Sanjay Tandon said that according to his habit, even today Rahul Gandhi has tried to mislead the country by making false statements through the press, You are considered bigger than the country. They consider themselves bigger than constitutional institutions, bigger than the court and even bigger than the Parliament.Rahul Gandhi has been punished for his speech given in 2019, today Rahul Gandhi said that I speak after thinking, so what Rahul Gandhi said in 2019, he spoke after thinking during the 2019 Lok Sabha election campaign Rahul Gandhi had said in Karnataka that why all thieves have Modi as their surname? After all, what was the meaning of this statement of Rahul Gandhi? The surname 'Modi' is a caste indicator word, which comes from the very backward society of the country. Thus, Rahul Gandhi had insulted the most backward society back most backward society, he has the right to criticize but not to abuse. Rahul Gandhi abused the surname 'Modi', so shouldn't legal action be taken against him? If Rahul

Gandhi thinks he has the right to abuse and humiliate anyone, then the person aggrieved by his abuse also has the right to file a defamation case. According to the Indian Penal Code, if any person abuses or says derogatory words to an organization or a particular person, then the aggrieved person or institution has the right to file a defamation suit against him. Does the Congress party have a problem with this law as well? In the court, Rahul Gandhi also got ample opportunity to speak through his lawyer, the court asked Rahul Gandhi will you apologise, he clearly said that he will not apologise, then the court gave its verdict. Anyway, 7 more cases against Rahul Gandhi in defamation case are going on in different parts of the country.

Stepping up its attack on the Narendra Modi-led government at the Centre, Congress president Mallikarjun Kharge on Sunday said his party will give a befitting reply if anyone attempts to 'crush' them, and will continue to fight to "protect the democracy". "BJP government and Narendra Modi ji is thinking that we are 'weak'. If someone tries to 'crush' us with arrogance, then we will give a befitting reply.We will continue to fight to protect the democracy, constitution, and freedom of speech and expression," Kharge said while addressing the party's,

'Sankalp Satyagraha', organised at Raj Ghat here over disqualification of its former chief Rahul Gandhi from Lok Sabha as a member.

Taking a swipe at Prime Minister Narendra Modi, the Congress president said, " Try all your efforts to 'bury' us. But you can't crush us. If you are a 'patriot', why don't you send them (Nirav Modi, Mehul Choksi) to jail who looted the people of the country. Defending former Congress chief over his Modi surname" remarks at a rally in Karnataka's Kolar in 2019, Kharge said, "The remarks made in Kolar was during election. It was not to insult anyone. But, they registered a case in Surat (Gujarat) to stop Rahul Gandhi from speaking the truth.

"Many such speeches were made by Modi. He used 'wrong' words against Gandhi family and Congress," he claimed.

Kharge added, "Rahul Gandhi ji is fighting for the people of this country, for you, for the women and for the youth. He is fighting against unemployment and inflation."

Talking about the 'Sankalp Satyagraha', the Congress chief said, "Today's 'satyagraha' is from 10 am to 5 pm. We will organise such 'satyagraha' across the country (over Rahul Gandhi's disqualification).'

Kharge also expressed his gratitude to the Opposition parties for extending their support to the former party chief.

"I am happy that all the Opposition parties unitedly stood with Rahul Gandhi. I express my gratitude to them," he said.

The former Congress president was disqualified from Lok Sabha as a member on Friday, a day after he was convicted in a defamation case by a court in Gujarat's Surat on Thursday for his alleged "all thieves have Modi surname" remarks at a rally in Karnataka's Kolar in 2019.
