PAKISTAN BURNING

8-day remand for Imran Khan as court indicts him in Toshakhana graft case

AGENCY
ISLAMABAD, MAY 10

An anti-corruption court in Pakistan on Wednesday sent former prime minister Imran Khan on an eight-day physical remand to the National Accountability Bureau while a sessions court here indicted him in a separate graft case. Meanwhile protests and riots are continue across Pakistan and Army has been deployed in several parts to maintain the situation.

The 70-year-old chairman of the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) was taken into custody by the paramilitary Rangers on Tuesday on the orders of the National Accountability Bureau (NAB) by barging into a room of the Islamabad High Court.

Khan was produced in the Anti-Accountability Court No. 1 presided by judge Muhammad Bashir, the same judge who had convicted former premier Nawaz Sharif and his daughter Maryam in a corruption case of having properties in London. Maryam was later on set free in the case by the Islamabad High Court. However, Sharif's case is still pending.

At the start of the hearing, the NAB lawyers requested the court to grant a 14-day remand of Khan to probe the allegations against him in the Al-Qadir Trust case in which he is accused of looting Rs 50 billion of the national treasury. But Khan's lawyer opposed the plea and asked the judge to release him as the charges were fabricated.

Khan was arrested on Tuesday in the case, sparking massive country-wide protests by his supporters.

After hearing arguments from both sides, the court reserved its ruling.

Later, announcing the reserved verdict, the accountability court sent Khan on an eight-day physical remand to the NAB.

In his statement, Khan told the accountability court that he was fearful for his life, the Express Tribune newspaper reported.

"I have not been to the washroom in 24 hours," he said. Khan requested the court to grant his doctor Faizal Sultan access to him.

"I am afraid I will meet the same fate as 'Maqsood Chaprasi'," Khan said, referring to

Imran's aide Asad Umar arrested from court premises

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) leader Asad Umar was arrested from the Islamabad High Court's (IHC) premises a day after the country's former prime minister Imran Khan was arrested, reported Geo News.

The Secretary General of PTI was apparently arrested by the Anti-Terrorist Squad of the Islamabad police today. Umar was taken into custody while waiting outside the IHC Bar Association's office, where they were drafting a plea to submit to the IHC. He had requested a meeting with the PTI Chairman Imran Khan through a petition, according to Geo News. PTI lawyers attempted to prevent the police from apprehending the force, but Umar was carried away despite their best attempts. Earlier today, Imran Khan's party called for a nationwide protest against his arrest.

a witness in Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif's money laundering case who died due to a cardiac arrest last year. Khan's party had termed the witness' death 'mysterious'.

Khan was also presented in the District and Sessions Court where judge Humayun Dilawar indicted him in the Toshakhana corruption case. He has been in the dock for buying gifts, including an expensive Graff wristwatch, he received as the premier at a discounted price from the state depository called Toshakhana and selling them for profit.

Established in 1974, the Toshakhana is a department under the administrative control of the Cabinet Division and stores precious gifts given to rulers, parliamentarians, bureaucrats, and officials by heads of other governments and states and foreign dignitaries.

The case was filed last year by the Election Commission of Pakistan and Khan had skipped several hearings in the past months. The New Police Guest House located in the high security premises of Police Lines

Headquarters at Sector H-11/1 area of Islamabad was declared as a court for the purpose of hearing two cases against the former cricketer-turned-politician.

Citing sources, Geo News reported that a medical report submitted to the NAB showed that Khan has been declared fit and he did not complain of any pain to the doctors examining him.

Elaborate security measures were put in place to stop PTI workers and supporters getting anywhere near the hearing facility. Even the media was not allowed to enter the area and even leading PTI leaders were barred from witnessing the hearing or meeting their leader.

Those not allowed to enter include PTI Senior Vice President Shah Mahmood Qureshi and Secretary General Asad Umar. The two in protest went to the Islamabad High Court to file a plea against the police decision to stop them from seeing Khan.

However, before any legal process was launched, Umar was arrested by the anti-terrorism squad of Islamabad police as two new cases have been launched against him for the violence by the PTI protests after the arrest of Khan.

Later, in a video message Qureshi said that attempts were made to arrest him by the police in Islamabad.

"They were successful in arresting Asad Umar sahib but I escaped by going inside the court [...] I am now at a safe location and am recording my message," he said.

Addressing PTI supporters and activists, he asked them to hold peaceful demonstrations across the country.

BUREAU
CHANDIGARH, MAY 10

After the coordinated raids on cyber thugs in Nuh district, pan-India cyber frauds to the tune of Rs 100 crore linked to these criminals have been unearthed. These thugs used to cheat people across the country with fake SIM, Aadhaar Cards etc. and used to deposit money in fake bank accounts to avoid arrest. People from Haryana to the national capital, Delhi and UP to Andaman-Nicobar have been targeted by these fraudsters. With their arrest, about 28,000 cases of cyber fraud have been traced across the country.

This was revealed by Superintendent of Police, Nuh Sh. Varun Singla while addressing a press conference in Nuh today. He informed that on the intervening night of April 27/28, 102 teams of 5000 policemen had raided 14 villages of the district simultaneously. During this raid, around 125 suspected hackers were detained. Out of these, 66 accused were identified and arrested. All were produced in the respective Courts and taken on remand for 7 to 11 days. Following the arrest, in order to unearth the whole nexus, Director General of Police, Haryana Sh. P.K. Agrawal deployed a team of 40 Cyber Experts from all across Haryana to be closely associated with the interrogation of these Cybercriminals. Sustained Interrogation of the Cybercriminals apprehended was thus carried out with the help of the Cyber experts and intricate details as regard the Modus operandi being adopted by the Cyber frauds as well as detailed information about sources of fake SIMs and Bank accounts were obtained. Road to village Bohla Khalsa not built

SHIV KUMAR SHARMA
KARNAL, MAY 10

The villagers of Bohla Khalsa village and Bohli village of Karnal have been fighting with the government and the administration for the last 8 years to get a road up to 4 kilometres long. The villagers went to the officials and leaders, but for the last 8 years they were disappointed. The situation is that now there is no one to listen to them. Therefore, now the villagers have given up setting fire to the leaders and officials. The villagers say that now the road is in the hands of Lord Ram. According to information, a paved road is going from village Bohla Khalsa to village Bir Badalwa. But in this, the road up to about 4 kilometres has been damaged. So many potholes have been made on the road that far from the movement of vehicles, cycles and bikes are also getting damaged. In 2016, the panchayat of village Bohla Khalsa passed a resolution and complained to the executive engineer of the Agricultural Marketing Board that the road up to 4 kilometres from village Bohla Khalsa to Bir Badalwa has become so dilapidated that even vehicles have started getting damaged. Some people have cut the road and merged it with the fields. It was written in the complaint that it has become difficult for vehicles on both sides to move.

charge BJP Scheduled Front issued a statement on Wednesday saying that former Chief Minister OP Chautala has not only insulted the Punjabi society but also the people of entire Haryana with his indecent language. He said that the people of the state have made Manohar Lal the Chief Minister with the power of democracy and vote. In Kangra, 437 infants are in the grip of acute malnutrition

SANJAY AGGARWAL
DHARAMSHALA, MAY 10

Although many schemes are being run by the central and state government to reduce the malnutrition of children. Despite this, in district Kangra, 437 children in the age group of 0 to 5 years are victims of severe malnutrition. Although severe malnourished children are 0.68 per cent of the total number of children aged 0 to 5 years in the district, despite this figure, the department is making efforts to reduce malnutrition among severely malnourished children. According to the department, severely malnourished children recover within a month, but for this awareness and timely proper care is necessary. The number of severely malnourished children is 59 in Nagrota Suriyan block of the district, which is the highest in the district and the least severely malnourished children are in Panchrukhi block. The main reason for severe malnutrition among children in the age group of 0 to 5 years is low birth weight and not providing complementary feeding in time. According to the information, the food of the children is pleased, but many people do not get the food of the children done at the time due to setting, if it remains for one month, then the food is put forward, this also affects the seriousness of the children, due to being malnourished. However, awareness programs are organized from time to time by the Women and Child Development Department. The reason for the number of severely malnourished children in Panchrukhi being only 2 is that protein rich food prepared by CSIR was distributed in this block, which is helpful in removing malnutrition. At the same time, a campaign was also launched by the district administration in this block, due to which the number of severely malnourished children is less in this block.

good sign for the times to come. He said that the highest pile of garbage in the world is in the capital of India, Delhi, whose height is more than Qutub Minar and it is increasing day by day. That's why we have to recycle 100 percent single use plastic at home by introducing awareness. 'The Kerala Story': SC agrees to hear film makers' plea against ban by WB on May 12

NEW DELHI, MAY 10

The Supreme Court on Wednesday agreed to list for hearing on May 12 plea of makers of the 'The Kerala Story' challenging the decision of the West Bengal government to ban the screening of the movie in the State. After senior advocate, Harish Salve, appearing for film-makers, mentioned the plea for urgent listing, a bench headed by Chief Justice of India D.Y. Chandrachud agreed to hear it on Friday. "We are losing money every day and now there is another State which says it will do the same," said Salve. CJI said, "Ok list on Friday, serve copies on the State of West Bengal." West Bengal Chief Minister Manata Banerjee has ordered an immediate ban on the screening of the film in the State to avoid "any incident of hatred and violence and to maintain peace in the State". The makers contended that the State government has no power to ban a movie that has been certified for public viewing by the Central Board of Film Certification. State government cannot cite law and order issues to stop the screening of the movie, which will result in the violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed to them, the plea of filmmakers said. They also alleged that the movie is facing a 'shadow' ban in Tamil Nadu and sought protection for screening the film in the southern State. The plea also challenged the de facto ban imposed on the movie by the State of Tamil Nadu by issuing an "alert" anticipating protests in connection with the release of the film due to which theatres in the State withdrew the film. On Tuesday, the bench agreed to list on May 15 an appeal against the interim order of the Kerala High Court refusing to stay the release of the film. The High Court had declined to stop the release of the film while observing that there was no allegation against a religion, but only against the organisation Islamic State or ISIS. The High Court watched the trailer of the film before refusing to stay its screenings and said that there was nothing offensive to any particular community in it while hearing a batch of pleas challenging the CBFC certification granted to the film. Earlier, the Supreme Court declined to interfere with the release of the movie and asked the High Court to decide the pleas. The apex court had then said, "Think about the labour of actors, producers who put in a lot of work. A filmmaker invests a lot of money and time in making the film. Leave it to the market, the market will decide if it is not up to the mark."

Jamiat Ulama-I-Hind had earlier approached the Supreme Court seeking a stay on the release of the movie in theatres and OTT platforms saying the movie was likely to cause hatred and enmity between different sections of society in India.

The plea said the film demeans the entire Muslim community and it will result in endangering the life and livelihood of the entire Muslim community.

Petty concern

Jean-Paul Sartre, the well-known French existentialist philosopher, was an avowed Marxist and a passionate opponent of French imperialism. He had supported the Algerian war of independence against France and had befriended Frantz Fanon who had been active in the Algerian cause. During this war, Sartre had asked soldiers of the French Foreign Legion who were fighting against the Front de Libération Nationale of Algeria to stop fighting and desert the army, advice that predictably brought accusations of treason against him. And yet, the French State took no action against Sartre. When President Charles de Gaulle was asked why, his answer was: "One does not arrest Voltaire!"

De Gaulle obviously did not mean that a Voltaire should not be arrested and prosecuted if he was alleged to have committed a murder or a robbery or some similar crime. What he meant was that as far as possible an iconic thinker like Voltaire, or Sartre, should be left free to think and express himself, even when one disagreed with his thought, since progress in thought was an essential condition for social progress. He recognised that a nation had to show respect to its iconic thinkers whether or not one agreed with them; indeed, the existence of such thinkers and the respect shown to them are important elements of what defined a nation.

To be sure, there would always be an intolerant fringe that differs from this perspective; indeed, the building in Paris where Sartre lived was bombed by right-wing elements during France's Algerian war. But the State did not hound Sartre.

Contrast this with what is happening in India. Amartya Sen is an iconic intellectual of this country, and he deserves the nation's respect not only for his outstanding intellectual work but also for his steadfast commitment to the values upon which modern India is founded, values that have never been officially repudiated by any regime, no matter how much the right-wing may dislike them. And yet, he is being hounded in the most unseemly manner by Visva-Bharati, an institution in whose establishment and growth his family had played a significant role. He is being accused of unauthorisedly occupying 0.13 acres of university land and threatened with forcible eviction from this land.

One would, of course, be asked: should unauthorised occupation, if it is at all the case, go unrectified? The answer, clearly, is: no. Let us assume for argument's sake, though it is far from established, that the university's assertion is correct and that Sen's house is located on a plot of land that exceeds the original lease of 1.25 acres by an additional 0.13 acres; but rectification can take several forms, the most obvious one being for the university to lease this additional 0.13 acres to him over and above the 1.25 acres which it claims were originally leased.

Air pollution association with risk of dementia

An worldwide study commissioned by the journal Lancet three years ago revealed 12 modifiable risk factors for dementia, including three new ones: excessive alcohol consumption, brain damage, and air pollution.

The findings of the study were published in the journal of Alzheimer's Disease, a team of researchers led by experts at the University of California San Diego expands on how exposure to the final of those new factors, ambient air pollution, such as car exhaust and power plant emissions, is connected with a significantly increased risk of acquiring dementia over time.

Senior author William S. Kremen, PhD, professor of psychiatry and co-director of the Center for Behavior Genetics of Aging at UC San Diego School of Medicine, and colleagues examined baseline cognitive assessments of approximately 1,100 men participating in the ongoing Vietnam Era Twin Study of Aging. Average baseline age was 56, with 12 years of follow up.

They additionally looked at measures of exposure to particular matter (PM2.5) in the air and nitrogen dioxide

(NO2), which is created when fossil fuels are burned, and assessments of episodic memory, executive function, verbal fluency, brain processing speed and APOE genotype. APOE is a gene that provides instructions for making a protein crucial to the transport of cholesterol and other fats in the bloodstream. One version or allele of APOE called APOE-4 has been identified as a strong risk factor for Alzheimer's disease. The researchers found that participants with higher levels of exposure to PM2.5 and NO2 in their 40s and 50s displayed worse cognitive functioning in verbal fluency from age 56 to 68. And persons with the APOE-4 allele appeared even more sensitive, with those exposed to higher PM2.5 levels showing worse outcomes for executive function and those with higher NO2 exposure showing worse outcomes involving episodic memory.

Executive function refers to higher-level cognitive skills used to plan, control and coordinate mental behaviors and acts. Episodic memory is the ability to recall and re-experience distinct, specific past events. "The 2020

Lancet report concluded that modifying 12 risk factors, which include others like education and depression at midlife, could reduce dementia incidence by as much as 40%," said first author Carol E. Franz, PhD, professor of psychiatry and co-director of the Center for Behavior Genetics of Aging. "That report placed ambient air pollution as a greater risk for Alzheimer's and related dementias than diabetes, physical activity, hypertension, alcohol consumption and obesity. Our findings underscore the importance of identifying modifiable risk factors as early in life as possible -- and that the processes by which air pollution affects risk for later-life cognitive decline begins earlier than previous studies suggest."

UAE, Thailand agree to launch CEPA negotiations

Thani bin Ahmed Al Zeyoudi, UAE Minister of State for Foreign Trade, and Jurin Laksanawisit, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Commerce of Thailand, have signed a joint statement agreeing to launch negotiations to establish a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) between the two countries.

The first round of negotiations will commence in the UAE on May 16. Thani Al Zeyoudi emphasized that these negotiations represent another important step in our growth agenda and underline UAE's role as a key enabler of global trade.

Al Zeyoudi underlined the developing relations between the UAE and Thailand, stating that the negotiations are a natural progression following the launch of the first UAE-Thai Business Council in February 2023.

He added: "Thailand is an increasingly important trade and investment partner for the UAE, and a high-growth economy in the heart of an exciting, rapidly emerging region. We have enjoyed strong bilateral trade growth in recent years and believe a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement will deliver a wealth of opportunity in sectors such as tourism, food security, IT, logistics and financial services. These negotiations represent another important step in our growth agenda and underline our role as a key enabler of global trade."

Thailand's economy is the second largest in South-East Asia and is projected to grow 3.8 per cent in 2023, driven by the rebound in the country's vital tourism sector. It also boasts a well-developed services sector that contributes 58.3 per cent of the nation's GDP. A UAE-Thailand CEPA will build on the rapidly increasing non-oil trade between the two nations, which increased 21 per cent in 2022 to reach USD 6.1 billion.

The UAE's principal exports to Thailand are ethylene polymers, gold, vegetable residues, delivery vehicles and parts, and electric batteries, with iron, steel and cosmetics emerging sectors.

In the other direction, Thailand's leading exports include office machinery and parts, motor vehicle parts, tires and aluminium plating.

Human eyes play 'tricks' on minds: Study

A new study has shown that the human visual system can 'trick' the brain into making inaccurate assumptions about the size of objects in the world around them. The research is published in the journal PLoS ONE.

The research findings could have implications for many aspects of everyday life, such as driving, how eye witness accounts are treated in the criminal justice system, and security issues, such as drone sightings. The research team from the University of York and Aston University presented participants with photographs of full-scale railway scenes, which had the upper and lower parts of the image blurred, as well photographs of small-scale models of railways that were not blurred.

Participants were asked to compare each image and decide which was the 'real' full-scale railway scene.

The results were that participants perceived that the blurred real trains were smaller than the models.

Dr Daniel Baker, from the University of York's Department of Psychology, said: "In order for us to determine the real size of objects that we see around us, our visual system needs to estimate the distance to the object.

"To arrive at an understanding of absolute size it can take into account the parts of the image that are blurred out - a bit like the out-of-focus areas that a camera produces - which involves a bit of complicated mathematics to give the brain the knowledge of spatial scale. "This new study, however, shows that we can be fooled in our estimates of object size. Photographers take advantage of this using a technique called 'tilt-shift miniaturisation', that can make life-size objects appear to be scale models."

The findings demonstrate that the human visual system is highly flexible - sometimes capable of accurate perception of size by exploiting what is known as 'defocus blur', but at other times subject to other influences and failing to make sense of real-world object size.

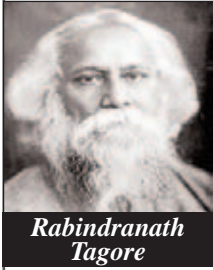

Professor Tim Meese, from Aston University, said: "Our results indicate that human vision can exploit defocus blur to infer perceptual scale but that it does this crudely.

"Overall, our findings provide new insights into the computational mechanisms used by the human brain in perceptual judgments about the relation between ourselves and the external world."

Patience

If thou speakest not I will fill my heart with thy silence and endure it. I will keep still and wait like the night with starry vigil and its head bent low with patience. The morning will surely come, the darkness will vanish, and thy voice pour down in golden streams breaking through the sky. Then thy words will take wing in songs from every one of my birds' nests, and thy melodies will break forth in flowers in all my forest groves. Rabindranath Tagore

Optimal treatment for excessive daytime sleepiness

Dena Zeraatkar and Tyler Pitre of McMaster University have found that the medicine solriamfetol is the most effective therapy for excessive daytime sleepiness (EDS) in persons with obstructive sleep apnea (OSA).

A positive airway pressure (PAP) mask, which employs compressed air to maintain lung airways during sleep, is the primary therapy for OSA.

Some patients with OSA, however, still have EDS and may benefit from anti-fatigue medicine.

Zeraatkar and Pitre published their findings in the Annals of Internal Medicine.

"The most important thing that people with OSA should do is use their PAP machine, but if they are still sleepy there are options in the form of medications that can reduce their tiredness," said first author Tyler Pitre, a resident physician in internal medicine at McMaster University and incoming respirology fellow at the University of Toronto.

"Fifteen to 30 per cent of people in North America have a diagnosis of OSA and the prevalence could be much higher as many others are undiagnosed.

Many people have symptoms as the condition is highly associated with obesity, which affects a large and increasing number of people in Canada, the United States and other high-income countries," he said.

"Among those patients, many will have EDS, which affects their quality of life, making them less productive and also puts them at risk of other psychological issues. Improving this situation is of paramount importance to physicians."

Pitre said that OSA affects nearly one billion people globally, leaving many of them at risk of EDS.

Zeraatkar and Pitre made their findings by conducting a systematic review of 14 clinical trials of anti-fatigue medications involving 3,085 people, as well as analysing data from MEDLINE, CENTRAL, EMBASE and ClinicalTrials.gov in a specific network meta-analysis. They conducted their research from October 2022 to January 2023. Senior author Zeraatkar said that while solriamfetol is likely the best medication for EDS, the drugs armodafinil-modafinil and pitolisant are also effective in combating fatigue. Solriamfetol can also raise blood pressure, especially risky for people with OSA, as many of them also have cardiovascular issues.

"It would be interesting to see how effective these anti-fatigue medications will be for treating related illnesses such as chronic fatigue syndrome and long COVID, now that we know they work for a similar condition," said Zeraatkar, an assistant professor of the Department of Anesthesia.

Expats find it easier to settle down in India - HSBC Research

CHANDIGARH: International citizens moving to India have experienced a relatively high level of ease when it comes to settling in the country, finds new HSBC research that delves into factors that enable people to settle down in a new country and feel a sense of belonging. Of the expats who have relocated to India, 80% said they settled into the host country in less than a year - with it taking on average 7.4 months to feel like they belonged, less than the global average of 8.3 months. Of the expats surveyed, 36% felt at home almost instantly, 23% in less than 6 months, and 21% in 6 months to a year. However, a number of Indians (i.e. those born in India) who moved abroad encountered difficulties in assimilating into their new communities. Specifically, about a third (33%) of Indians who have relocated abroad did not agree that they 'feel like a local' in their host country, while almost 31% were similarly unsure about their sense of belonging. HSBC research among international citizens found that while the top motivation for moving abroad is the promise of a better lifestyle for almost a third globally (29%), the path to feeling settled, with a real sense of belonging, is not always straightforward.

RANVIR PARASHAR
KAITHAL, MAY 10

DC Jagdish Sharma said that along with wheat and paddy, every person should include traditional coarse grains such as millet, jowar, maize, because nutrients are found in abundance in these grains. It works to increase our immunity. Considering importance of this, the year 2023 is being celebrated as the International Year of Millets. DC Jagdish Sharma told that in today's time the symptoms of nutritional deficiency are visible in every woman and children, the main reason for which is to limit themselves to wheat and paddy leaving their traditional coarse grains. He said that 70 other countries have also agreed to celebrate the International Year of Millets. The time has come to re-know and understand properties of coarse grains and include them in life. Coarse grains have been familiar for years. When the weather changes, they eat bread made of maize, jowar and bajra with enthusiasm, but the general public is unaware of their qualities. Apart from these, oats, kodo, kutki, ragi and sama are also included in coarse grains. DC told that all coarse grains are full of qualities. The fiber found in these and both soluble and insoluble forms of this fiber work like a boon in the digestive system in our body. Soluble fiber improves digestion by supporting naturally occurring bacteria in the gut, while insoluble fiber helps in bulking up and moving stool through the digestive tract. It also absorbs a lot of water, which means a person feels very thirsty after eating coarse cereals, which is very good for the digestive system.

I am thrilled for the audience to see me in this new role envisioned by Sudhanshu, who has such a fresh approach towards dealing with this genre. I am also looking forward to work with such talented co-actors and a development studio like Junglee Pictures for the first time."
