Editorial
New army

Curiouser and curiouser. Only Jadavpur University is not Alice’s wonderland: it is an educational institution into which an ordered group in army fatigues marched in and arranged itself before the administrative building. Its claims were various, from being part of the Indian army to being connected to the National Human Rights Commission. Apart from the wildly divergent nature of these two claims, the impossibility of an NHRC team in camouflage gear did not seem to have struck the group. Chillingly, it used the official logo and insignia of the Indian army, not just the fatigues, and it is on this basis that the police filed a suo motu case against it when the Eastern Command denied any knowledge of it. But the enigma about its identity did not end there. The letters on the members’ shoulder lapels were supposed to stand for “World Human Rights Peace Force” and the letterhead they carried said “Asian Human Rights Society”. They claimed to have come to establish peace in the university campus, to provide security and ‘human surveillance’. Who were they and where had they come from? How did they get to wear army fatigues with the army’s official logo? Who invited them?

The officiating vice-chancellor, a pro-Bharatiya Janata Party teacher, did not say he had invited such an outfit, but it was his resistance to permit complaints to the police that appeared to have delayed the university’s first information report for two days. The police are not allowed in the campus without the vice-chancellor’s say-so. But the officiating vice-chancellor had no objection to an apparently military-minded force — he called them an ‘NGO’ — volunteering to ensure security within university premises. The recent horror of a fatal ragging appears to have been the raison d’être of the outfit’s entry. Later he claimed that objecting to them was acceptable since the police had found they were not part of the army. Did that mean that he would welcome official military presence in the university? Or was it just politic withdrawal after a mysterious toe-dipping exercise? Whatever the outfit’s claims, the blossoming of a private army in the city at the heart of a leading educational institution augurs severe danger. The police need to uncover the identity and origin of the group to stop its proliferation.

New test chamber to keep people cool

A shipping container that can be used to test passive cooling systems could assist researchers and builders in discovering carbon-free solutions to keep people cool in high temperatures.

Washington State University researchers created the 60-square-foot chamber to test passive systems that use wind towers along with water evaporation instead of electricity to cool spaces.

Finding cooling methods that don’t require putting more greenhouse gases into the air is crucial to helping a growing population adapt to climate change, said Omar Al-Hassawi lead author of the study in the journal, Energies. “Cooling is increasingly in demand in buildings, especially as the climate gets hotter,” said Al-Hassawi, assistant professor in WSU’s School of Design and Construction. “There might be inclusion of mechanical systems, but how can we cool buildings to begin with — before relying on the mechanical systems?”

The test chamber the researchers developed is solar powered with battery storage and is completely independent of grid power. It can be heated to a temperature range between 125 and 130 degrees Fahrenheit year-round to test cooling innovations, measuring the temperature, humidity and air velocity within and around a cooling system. The researchers calibrated the chamber using the results of a full-scale experiment that was conducted on a passive, downdraft cooling system tested under the hot dry conditions of Phoenix, Arizona.

“We can simulate extreme conditions,” Al-Hassawi said. “With smaller scale models, we can also do much quicker tests and get results sooner than having to wait on large-scale prototype construction.”

Buildings consume about 60% of the world’s electricity with nearly 20% of that going to keep them cool, according to Al-Hassawi. In the U.S., almost 90% of residential homes and apartments use mechanical air conditioners. As people worldwide grapple with global warming, energy demand for mechanical air conditioning is expected to double by the year 2050. Powering air conditioning units requires electricity, which is often generated by fossil fuels, increasing carbon emissions and contributing to worsening global warming.

“There’s a lot of new construction with the rising global population that is going to happen in the coming years, and a lot of it is going to be in the developing world,” Al-Hassawi said. “So if we build like we’ve been building and continue to rely on mechanical systems to meet cooling demands, that’s going to be an issue. There’s going to be a lot more air conditioning that’s needed, especially with the population rise in the hotter regions of the world.”

Passive cooling systems that don’t require electricity have been used for centuries by people in hot places, going back to about 2500 BC in ancient Egypt. One cooling strategy involves capturing breezes from a tower. With a layer of moisture at the top of the tower, evaporation cools the air, which then becomes heavier and sinks by gravity into a living space below. The moisture can be provided by wetted pads, shower heads, or misting nozzles. Typically, mechanical fans are only required as a backup.

Although such systems are occasionally used in hot places like Phoenix, Arizona, people and building professionals are often not familiar with passive cooling techniques or misunderstand them. A passive cooling strategy could make use of old smokestacks in older buildings, for instance, as a cooling tower and could be applicable both for existing or new construction, said Al-Hassawi.

“It’s an older technology, but there’s been an attempt to innovate and use a mix of new and existing technologies to improve performance and the cooling capacity of these systems,” he said.

Wider adoption of such passive cooling systems could lower energy demand, but trying to research and test passive cooling systems takes considerable investment and training. “That’s why research like this would really help,” he said. “How can we address building design, revive some of these more ancient strategies, and include them in contemporary building construction? The test chamber becomes a platform to do this.”

Students have designed and built some prototype cooling systems which utilize the passive downdraft cooling system. These will be tested starting next semester.

Al-Hassawi hopes that industry partners might also be interested in testing passive system designs in the chamber over the coming academic year.

Evergrande Group's shares plummet over 80pc in Hong Kong

World’s most indebted real state developer, Evergrande Group’s shares plummeted 87 per cent on Monday after the lifting of a 17-month trading suspension, CNN reported.

In the first six months of 2023, Evergrande, in a Sunday filing to the Hong Kong stock exchange said that its loss attributable to shareholders amounted to 33 billion yuan (USD 4.5 billion), which is 50 per cent of the 66.4 billion yuan loss (USD 9.1 billion) recorded in the same period a year ago.

Revenue surged 44 per cent from a year ago, reaching 128.2 billion yuan (USD 17.6 billion).

The company said it had “actively planned for the resumption of sales and successfully seized the short boom of the property market that emerged at the beginning of the year.”

For years, the Shenzhen-based company was one of China’s largest property developers by sales. But it had borrowed heavily to fund its expansion and defaulted on its debt in 2021, sparking a crisis in China’s real state sector, which accounts for as much as 30 per cent of the country’s economy. Earlier this month, it applied for bankruptcy in the United States, reported CNN. Earlier this month, Evergrande filed for Chapter 15 bankruptcy, which is a way for foreign companies to use US bankruptcy law to restructure debt.

The downfall of Evergrande started in 2021, when the central government moved to curb excessive borrowing to try to slow the rise in home prices, effectively cutting off a major source of funding for property developers, as per CNN.

Evergrande, which had 300 billion USD in liabilities, couldn’t shore up cash fast enough to make its debt payments.

It defaulted in December 2021, triggering a market panic. A wave of defaults followed, and China’s vast real estate market has yet to recover. The building was suspended on dozens of projects, leaving many “pre-sale” buyers with no new home and a hefty debt burden, according to CNN.

France will ban wearing abaya dress in schools

At the head of the start of the new school year, France’s education minister has said that wearing abaya, a loose-fitting, full-length robe worn by certain Muslim women, will be banned in state-run schools, reported Al Jazeera.

Since 19th-century legislation eliminated any traditional Catholic influence from public education, France has strictly prohibited religious signs in state-run schools and has struggled to modernise regulations to meet with a rising Muslim population.

The wearing of huge crosses, Jewish kippas, or Islamic headscarves is not permitted in French public schools, according to Al Jazeera. Both the 2004 and 2010 bans on full face veils in public spaces infuriated a large portion of the nation’s five million-strong Muslim population. “I have decided that the abaya could no longer be worn in schools,” Al Jazeera reported quoting Education Minister Gabriel Attal’s interview with TV channel

TF1. “When you walk into a classroom, you shouldn’t be able to identify the pupils’ religion just by looking at them.”

The decision was made following months of discussion on the wearing of abayas at French schools, where women have traditionally been prohibited from donning the hijab. The ban had been promoted by the right and extreme right, who claimed it would violate civil liberties. Abayas, in contrast to headscarves, were in the grey region and had not yet been banned.

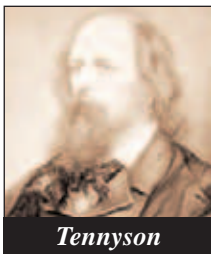

Clothing alone is not “a religious sign,” according to the French Council of Muslim Faith (CFCM), a national organisation that represents numerous Muslim organisations.

Across the political spectrum, from left-wingers preserving the liberal ideas of the Enlightenment to far-right conservatives seeking a bulwark against the rising influence of Islam in French society, the defence of secularism is a rallying cry in France, Al Jazeera reported.

POEM

The Higher Pantheism

The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills and the plains, - Are not these, O Soul, the Vision of Him who reigns? Is not the Vision He, tho' He be not that which He seems?

Tennyson

Dreams are true while they last, and do we not live in dreams? Earth, these solid stars, this weight of body and limb, Are they not sign and symbol of thy division from Him? Dark is the world to thee; thyself art the reason why, For is He not all but thou, that hast power to feel "I am I"? Glory about thee, without thee; and thou fulfillest thy doom, Making Him broken gleams.

Japan postpones launch of rocket carrying lunar lander

An H2A rocket carrying a probe intended to attempt the country’s first lunar landing was scheduled to be launched from Japan, on Monday morning, however, the mission was postponed due to unfavourable weather, NHK reported.

At 9:26 am, the H2A rocket was scheduled to launch from the Tanegashima Space Centre in the Kagoshima prefecture in the southwest of Japan. The Smart Lander for Investigating the Moon, or SLIM, lunar probe was developed by Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (JAXA). Its tasks include exploring moon rocks and displaying precise landing procedures, according to NHK. NHK provided the latest information on Japan and Asia through television, radio and online to a global audience.

Japan will become the fifth country in the world to successfully land a probe on the moon if the mission is a success. The US-led Artemis programme, which intends to transport astronauts to the moon, will use the data the probe collects.

The X-Ray Imaging and Spectroscopy Mission, or XRISM, which JAXA developed cooperation with the US space agency NASA and other organisations, will also be launched aboard the H2A rocket.

JAXA strengthened its checks of shared components to allay worries that the failure of the new H3 rocket’s March debut might have an influence on the launch of the H2A, NHK reported.

On August 23, India took a giant leap as the Chandrayaan-3 lander module successfully landed on the moon’s South Pole region, making it the first country to have achieved the historic feat and bringing to an end the disappointment over the crash landing of the Chandrayaan-2, four years ago.

Overall, India became the fourth country – after the US, China, and Russia – to have successfully landed on the moon’s surface.

It's a tradition that I've had passed on from my mother and I am now inculcating the same in my daughter too. In addition to healthy eating habits, I also prioritize physical activity. Amazing benefits of fish oil for health

As per a report, in 2020, fish oil-based supplements led the supplements market, accounting for more than 63.1% share of global revenues! As one of the most commonly consumed nutritional supplements, it certainly makes one wonder if fish oil benefits us in any way at all. Read on to find out. Nutrition Facts Of Fish Oil Fish oil is abundant in two omega-3 fatty acids, namely eicosapentaenoic acid (EPA) and docosahexaenoic acid (DHA). Fish oil supplements come in varying nutritional strengths. One soft gel capsule may contain 1000 mg omega-3 fatty acids, 330 mg EPA, 220 mg DHA, vitamin A, vitamin D, 0.5 gm protein, 1.25 gm fat, and 0.09 gm carbohydrate. What Is Fish Oil? Fish oil is the oil derived from the tissues of fatty or oily fish, primarily tuna, salmon, herring, sardine, mackerel, anchovy, and pilchard. It can also be produced from the livers of other fish, for example, cod liver oil or shark liver oil. Interestingly, marine and freshwater fish oils vary in EPA and DHA content. Also, predatory fish like tuna, shark, swordfish, etc. have more omega-3 fatty acids. These fish do not produce omega-3 fatty acids in their bodies, but accumulate the same through consumption of microalgae or prey fish that have also accumulated omega-3 fatty acids from their food source. Potential Health Benefits Of Fish Oil Fish oil supplements have several health benefits to offer. 1. May Reduce Blood Pressure People who take fish oil are reported to have lower blood pressure levels. However, the beneficial effects of this supplement are greater in those with moderate to severe high blood pressure levels than in individuals with mildly elevated levels. 2. Heart Health As per studies, there is a lower prevalence of heart disease in individuals who eat a lot of fish. As such, consumption of fish or fish oil supplements is said to reduce multiple risk factors for heart disease. Fish oil can increase levels of HDL, the good cholesterol, and lower levels of LDL, the bad cholesterol. It can also lower triglycerides and prevent the formation of plaques in arteries. 3. Mental Health Omega-3 fatty acids are essential for brain function. Studies show that people with certain mental health conditions have low omega-3 levels, and further research suggests that these fatty acids can not only improve the symptoms of but also prevent the onset of certain mental health conditions like psychotic disorders, schizophrenia and bipolar disorder. 4. Eye Health As per research, people who don't intake enough omega-3 fatty acids have a higher risk of eye diseases. While we still have unconvincing results as to the benefits of fish oil for eye health, eating fish is certainly linked to a reduced risk of age-related macular degeneration. 5. Reduce Inflammation Chronic inflammation can lead to health conditions like heart disease, diabetes, obesity, and even depression. Fish oil has been found to reduce the production and gene expression of cytokines, which are inflammatory molecules.

6. Skin Health Omega-3 fatty acids can improve skin health by regulating sebum or oil production, balancing hydration, and minimising breakouts. Regular intake of fish oil can also delay skin ageing. This supplement can be beneficial in helping treat skin conditions like eczema, dermatitis, and psoriasis. 7. Hair Health Owing to its nutritional makeup, fish oil can promote hair growth, prevent hair greying, improve the hair growth cycle, increase hair density and thickness, boost shine, and reduce hair loss and thinning. It also nourishes the scalp and reduces dandruff and scalp irritation. 8. During Pregnancy Omega-3 fatty acids can support brain and eye development in babies, help prevent preterm birth, and reduce depressive symptoms. 9. Reduce Severity Of COVID-19 Omega-3 fatty acids boost immunity and can help in the prevention of cold and flu, also reducing the risk of cold further developing into lung infection.

There should be single window system in Haryana like Gujarat: Bhatia

SHIV KUMAR SHARMA KARNAL, AUG 28

Mahesh Bhatia, State Vice President of Haryana Vyapar Mandal, Chairman of Shri Radha Krishna Gaushala and Senior Vice President of Punjabi Biradari Bhavan, along with several social organisations, said in a meeting with the media that a person never belongs to a particular caste, he is good or bad. This is the only identity of man. A person should work hard by focusing on his work and these qualities are innate in a businessman. Traders should get the support of the government, which has been received a lot in Haryana, due to which trade and industry have flourished in Haryana, but I believe that there is a need for simplification in new trade and industry, because whoever pays the highest tax to the government, then that trader. The government should have CLU i.e. single window system for all the small industries so that all the paperwork of the trader can be completed through a single window.

Simplification of business, single window system in Haryana should be like Gujarat. He said that he himself belongs to a hospitality industry, in which a lot of formalities have to be followed while taking CLU, permission has to be obtained from at least 20-25 departments, whose government fees are also very high, so its simplification is needed today. The need of the hour is very high, simplification of business in Haryana should be on the lines of Gujarat. The government should provide loan facilities to small and medium scale industries at a simple rate of interest. Apart from subsidies in GST, indigenous products should be promoted by giving subsidies in electricity bills, China is a living example of this.
