India's wholesale inflation rises to 1.26 pc in April

AGENCY NEW DELHI, MAY 14

Primarily driven by high food and vegetable prices, India's wholesale price index (WPI) based inflation rose to 1.26% year-on-year in April 2024 from 0.53% in the previous month, data released by Ministry of Commerce and Industry showed on Tuesday.

The data showed that the rate of inflation based on WPI Food Index increased from 4.65% in March, 2024 to 5.52% in April, 2024.

"Positive rate of inflation in April, 2024 is primarily due to increase in prices of food articles, electricity, crude petroleum & natural gas, manufacture of food products, other manufacturing etc," said an official release. As per data released by Ministry of Statistics & Programme Implementation (MoSPI) on Monday this week, India's retail inflation measured by consumer price index (CPI) eased to 4.83% in April this year even as food inflation remained elevated primarily on account of pulses and vegetable prices staying firm. The headline retail inflation has remained below the upper tolerance band of the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) for several months now. In the light of the downward trend in retail inflation, the RBI has kept the policy repo rate unchanged. Retail inflation is one of the most important factors that is considered by RBI while determining the key lending rate.

The WPI captures the average movement of wholesale prices of goods and is primarily used as a GDP (gross domestic product) deflator. As per the latest data, the month-over-month change in WPI index for the month of April, 2024 stood at 0.79% as compared to March, 2024.

The data showed elevated inflation in the case of many kitchen and food items such as pulses, vegetables, onion and potato. The rate of year-on-year inflation in the case of onions in the month of April this year was as much as 59% while that for potatoes was 71.97%.

First student of the School to pass NMMS exam

RAJNEESH SHARMA HAMIRPUR: In a world where education is considered the most valuable asset, a significant portion of the population cannot afford even the basic primary education expenses. Often, meritorious students are compelled to leave school simply because their families cannot bear the expenses of higher education. Recognizing this challenge, the Government of India initiated the National Means-cum-Merit Scholarship (NMMS) in 2008 for talented students, aiming to encourage them to complete their secondary and higher secondary education so that the dropout rate after class 8 can be reduced.

Under this scheme, students receive a scholarship of Rs. 12,000 per year for up to 4 years to continue their studies at the secondary level. The selection for this scholarship is done through an examination conducted by each respective state/UT for their eligible students. These examinations include a mental ability test and an educational aptitude test, the guidelines for which are determined by the NCERT. Applicants are required to complete each exam within a maximum duration of 90 minutes. Anjali, a student of class ninth at the Government Senior Secondary School Touni Devi, has illuminated the name of the school by becoming the first student to pass the NMMS exam.

That lost melody

A diamond style placed against the rotating cylinder made tiny dents in the tin foil as someone spoke into a mouthpiece attached nearby. These dents represented the original sound waves. The entire process was run manually, that is, without electricity. Thomas Edison's phonograph record was cylindrical. It consisted of a small metal cylinder wrapped in tin foil and mounted on an axle that could be rotated. When Thomas Alva Edison recited "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into his first phonograph in 1877, little did he realise that the concept of sound reproduction would dominate the entertainment industry worldwide. Lal Chand Boral's "Kader kuler bou go tumi" was a super hit and fetched the Gramophone Company high revenues.

The first Indian recording made commercially in Calcutta took place on November 8, 1902. The singers were two nautch girls, Sashi Mukhi and Feni Bala, from Amarendra Nath Dutta's Classic Theatre. These kids, aged 14 and 16, probably knew nothing about sound recording and had a "miserable voice" (as F.W. Gaisberg described in his autobiography, The Music Goes Round). Initial recordings were taken from nautch girls and kothawalis. Amala Das was the first woman from a 'respectable family' to have her voice recorded. Popularly known as 'Miss Das' in the then music world, Amala was the sister of Deshbandhu Chit-taranjan Das.

It has been precisely 96 years since the gramophone arrived commercially in India — 96 years since the Gramophone Company factory was opened at 33 Jessore Road. After undertaking the first recording expedition, the Gramophone Company tasted almost instant success. The master discs of the recordings made in India had to be taken to Germany for final pressing and labelling. As the country's record industry grew, the Gramophone Company found it feasible to establish a record-pressing plant in India to cut costs and time. The site chosen for the purpose was Beliaghata, near Seal-dah. The factory became popularly known as 'Baja Khanna'.

In the early days of the music industry in India, Hemendra Mohan Bose saw an opportunity to use the phonograph for commercial purposes. Initially, he collaborated with Pathé Freres to sell Pathé phonographs. The venture was successful. Encouraged by this, Bose launched his own cylinders named 'H. Bose's Records'. H. Bose's Records claimed to be the first company to manufacture complete records in Calcutta. Its records were cylindrical, allowing them to be produced in small numbers and sold immediately, unlike discs that required pressing in pressing factories. This claim enabled Bose to assert that his records were made in India, although he had to import the blank cylinders from Europe.

Sleep is a basic requirement, much like food and drink

A group of academics from the arts and sciences came up with a theory that may account for the complexity of the brain as well as the importance of sleep.

In order to demonstrate that the brain must periodically reset its operating system, researchers recently recorded the brain activity of sleeping rats for publication in the journal Nature Neuroscience.

Sleep is a basic requirement, much like food and drink. "You'll die without it," warned Keith Hengen, an assistant professor of biology at Washington University in St. Louis.

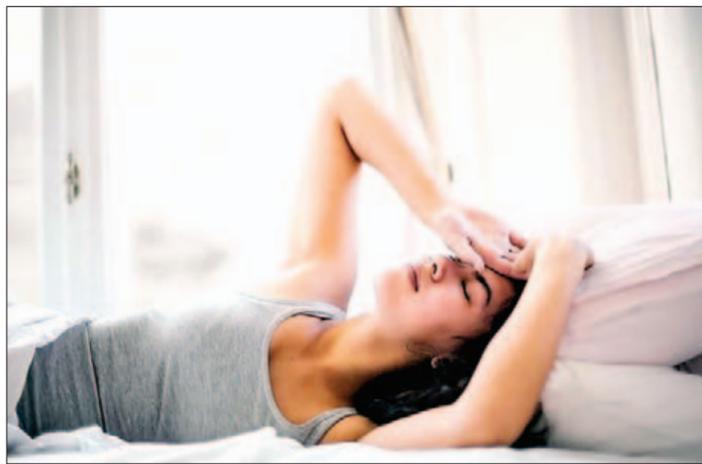

But what does sleep accomplish? For years, academics could only state that sleep reduces tiredness, which is hardly a satisfactory explanation for a core human need.

"The brain is like a biological computer," Hengen said. "Memory and experience during waking change the code bit by bit, slowly pulling the larger system away from an ideal state. The central purpose of sleep is to restore an optimal computational state."

Co-authors of the paper include Ralf Wessel, a professor of physics; Yifan Xu, a graduate student in biology studying neuroscience; and Aidan Schneider, a graduate student in the Computational & Systems Biology program, all in Arts & Sciences.

Wessel said physicists have been thinking about criticality for more than 30 years, but they never dreamed the work would have implications for sleep. In the world of physics, criticality describes a complex system that exists at the tipping point between order and chaos. "At one extreme, everything is completely regular. At the other extreme, everything is random," Wessel said.

Criticality maximizes the encoding and processing of information, making it an attractive candidate for a general principle of neurobiology. In a 2019 study, Hengen and Wessel established that the brain actively works to maintain criticality.

In the new paper, the team provides the first direct evidence that sleep restores the computational power of the brain. It's a radical departure from the long-held assumption that sleep must somehow replenish mysterious and unknown chemicals depleted during waking hours.

After their 2019 paper, Hengen and Wessel theorized that learning, thinking and being awake must push the brain away from criticality and that sleep is perfectly positioned to reset the system. "We realized this would be a really cool and intuitive explanation for the core purpose of sleep," Hengen said. "Sleep is a systems-level solution to a systems-level problem."

To test their theory on the role of criticality in sleep, the researchers tracked the spiking of many neurons in the brains of young rats as they went about their normal sleeping and waking routines.

"You can follow these little cascades of activity through the neural network," Hengen said. These cascades, also called neural avalanches, reflect how information flows through the brain, he said.

"At criticality, avalanches of all sizes and durations can occur. Away from criticality, the system becomes biased toward only small avalanches or only large avalanches. This is analogous to writing a book and only being able to use short or long words." As predicted, avalanches of all sizes occurred in the rats that had just woken up from restorative sleep.

Across the course of waking, the cascades started to shift toward smaller and smaller sizes.

The researchers found they could predict when rats were about to go to sleep or wake up by tracking the distribution of avalanches. When cascade sizes were reduced to a certain point, sleep wasn't far away. "The results suggest that every waking moment pushes relevant brain circuits away from criticality, and sleep helps the brain reset," Hengen said.

When physicists first developed the concept of criticality in the late 1980s, they were looking at piles of sand on a checkerboard-like grid, a scenario seemingly far removed from brains. But those sand piles provided an important insight, Hengen said.

If thousands of grains are dropped on the grid following simple rules, the piles quickly reach a critical state where interesting things start happening.

Avalanches both large and small can start without warning, and piles in one square start spilling into the others. "The whole system organizes itself into something extremely complex," he said.

The neural avalanches taking place in the brain are much like the avalanches of sand on a grid, Wessel said. In each case, the cascades are the hallmark of a system that has reached its most complex state.

According to Hengen, every neuron is like an individual grain of sand following very basic rules. Neurons are essentially on/off switches that decide whether or not to fire based on straightforward inputs.

If billions of neurons can reach criticality — the sweet spot between too much order and too much chaos — they can work together to form something complex and wondrous. "Criticality maximizes a bunch of features that sound very desirable for a brain," Hengen said.

Purity

Life of my life, I shall ever try to keep my body pure, knowing that thy living touch is upon all my limbs. I shall ever try to keep all untruths out from my thoughts, knowing that thou art that truth which has kindled the light of reason in my mind. I shall ever try to drive all evils away from my heart and keep my love in flower, knowing that thou hast thy seat in the inmost shrine of my heart. And it shall be my endeavour to reveal thee in my actions, knowing it is thy power gives me strength to act.

How yoga linked with symptom improvement in patients with heart failure

According to a study, yoga that focuses on breathing, meditation, and relaxation is connected to symptom improvement in people with heart failure.

Study presented at Heart Failure 2024, a scientific meeting of the European Society of Cardiology (ESC).

"Patients who practised yoga on top of taking their medications felt better, were able to do more, and had stronger hearts than those who only took drugs for their heart failure," said study author Dr. Ajit Singh of the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR), Manipal Academy of Higher Education, India. "The findings suggest that yoga can be a beneficial complementary therapy in patients with heart failure."

Heart Failure affects vast numbers of people - more than 64 million globally and can have devastating impacts on quality of life, with patients feeling tired and breathless, and being unable to participate in their usual activities. While previous studies have shown the short-term benefits of yoga in patients with heart failure, this study provides new information about the long-term effects.

The study enrolled patients aged

30 to 70 years with heart failure from the cardiology outpatient department of Kasturba Hospital in Manipal, India. All participants had undergone a cardiac procedure within the past six months to one year and were taking guideline-recommended heart failure medications. Patients with severe symptoms were excluded.

The study included 85 patients. The average age was 49 years and 70 (82%) were men. In a non-randomised fashion, 40 patients were assigned to the yoga group and 45 patients were allocated to the control group. All participants continued taking guideline-recommended heart failure medications throughout the study.

The study included 85 patients. The average age was 49 years and 70

(82%) were men. In a non-randomised fashion, 40 patients were assigned to the yoga group and 45 patients were allocated to the control group. All participants continued taking guideline-recommended heart failure medications throughout the study.

Experienced faculty in the hospital's Department of Yoga demonstrated pranayama (yogic breathwork), meditation, and relaxation techniques to patients in the yoga group. Participants were supervised for one week and then advised to continue self-administered yoga at home once a week for 50 minutes. Patients spoke to an instructor after each home session to check progress.

At baseline, six months, and one year, the researchers assessed heart structure and function in the yoga and control groups using echocardiography. The measurements included the ability of the heart to pump blood (left ventricular ejection fraction), and assessment of right ventricular function. The researchers also examined blood pressure, heart rate, body weight, and body mass index. Symptom burden and the ability to do ordinary activities such as walking and climbing stairs were assessed using the New York Heart Association classification system.

Compared to the control group, the yoga group demonstrated significantly greater improvements in all measurements at six months and one year relative to baseline.

Dr. Singh said: "Patients who did yoga had healthier hearts and were more able to carry out ordinary activities such as walking and climbing stairs than those who only took medications. Patients with heart failure should speak to their doctor before starting yoga and should then receive training from an experienced instructor. Prescribed medications should be continued as before. Yoga may be unsuitable for heart failure patients with severe symptoms, who were excluded from our study."

Cricket South Africa criticised for failure in meeting transformation targets during T20 WC squad selection

Johannesburg: South African ICC T20 World Cup failed to meet the transformation targets, resulting in the board admitting that "various initiatives that have been pursued over the years have not yielded the desired results, especially in terms of producing Black African cricketers at the highest levels". But this will not lead to any sort of interference in selection, as per a board spokesperson, as per ESPNcricinfo. The 15-player provisional squad for the 2024 edition of the tournament, consists of six players of colour out of which just one, pacer Kagiso Rabada, is a black African. The current targets of CSA needs the national side to field over the course of the season, six players of colour in playing XI out of which two must be black Africans. CSA will have a chance to improve on this average during the 2024-25 summer season. But even if Reeza Hendricks, Bjorn Fortuin, Keshav Mahara, Tabraiz Shamsi, Rabada and Othnieel Baartman play all games in the T20 WC, South Africa will be missing the target of two black African players in the tournament. Speaking on the national broadcaster SABC, the former CSA and International Cricket Council (ICC) president criticised the sport for going "backwards" and "betraying the people who asked us to negotiate unity". Also, the former sports minister of South Africa, Fikile Mbalula, the secretary general of the ruling African National Congress, called it a "reversal of the gains of transformation".

"It has made big difference": Ravi Shastri backs Impact Player rule

NEW DELHI: Former India coach Ravi Shastri supported the Impact Player rule in the Indian Premier League (IPL), citing how it has led to exciting endings. However, several current players and coaches disagree. The Impact Player rule has been a hot topic of debate during the IPL 2024 and Shastri said the rule has contributed to many compelling finishes in the ongoing IPL edition. "The Impact Player [rule] is good. You have to evolve with the times. You know, it happens in other sports as well. It's got tighter finishes. You have to evolve with the times and I think it's a good rule."

You saw the number of tight finishes we had in last year's IPL. So, you know, it has made a big difference," Shastri told Ravichandran Ashwin on his YouTube channel. The rule allows a particular team to introduce a 12th player to the team from a list in which the five names are given at the time of a toss. A team can bring in a player for the playing XI by replacing any player the team wants, depending on the situation. "You know when any new rule comes in, there will be...people will try and justify why that's not right. But in time when you see the scores - 200 and 190 - and then like you mentioned individuals grabbing that opportunity and making the most of it, people will start re-looking at how they think about it," Shastri said. Meanwhile, Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) secretary Jay Shah refused to commit to the continuation of the Impact Player rule in the Indian Premier League (IPL), saying it would be decided after consulting with captains and coaches.

However, he emphasised the importance of the rule, which permits two additional Indian players to be included in an IPL team's XI. The Impact Player rule has been a hot topic of debate during the IPL 2024 and the BCCI Secretary said that the rule is not "permanent." "Impact Player is like a test case. We have implemented it slowly. The biggest advantage of it is that two Indian players are getting a chance [in each game], which is the most important. We will consult with the players, franchisees, broadcasters [and take a call.

Pallavi and her family members disguise themselves to trap Pappi Mehra in Sony SAB's 'Aangan Aapno Kaa'

CHANDIGARH : Sony SAB's Aangan Aapno Kaa is a family drama that showcases the story of Pallavi Sharma (Ayushi Khurana) whose unconventional views on marriage make her navigate the challenges within her in-laws' home and establish her identity. In recent episodes, Pallavi confides in her family members about her plan to outsmart Pappi Mehra (Ashwin Kaushal), the fraudster who has deceived them.

In the upcoming episodes, the entire Sharma and Awasthi family disguised themselves into various looks to trap Pappi in his own web. To execute her plan, Tanvi (Aditi Rathore) dons the role of an NRI, who wants to sell off her land, whereas Deepika (Neetha Shetty) becomes her assistant. Even Akash's chachi Kusum (Sonali Naik) turns into a beggar, praising the NRI in front of Pappi. Pallavi, too, takes up the role of a guy to solidify the trap with Akash (Samar Vermani) too joining forces, after he gets a reality check from the police officer who asks him for bribes to take the matter into consideration. Tanvi, although nervous, puts up a fantastic drama which makes Pappi think that this is a big deal and he will get to earn a lot of profit in dollars.

Ayushi Khurana, playing the role of Pallavi, said, "Pallavi's plan is finally in motion, and with a surprising amount of support, including from Kusum this time, she feels significantly empowered. Despite the challenges, she never wavered in her determination. With Akash by her side, her resolve strengthens even further. The upcoming episodes will show how Pallavi's family manages to tackle this problem and win over Pappi Mehra."

Here's what Zee TV actors have to say about their respective families on International Day of Families

CHANDIGARH: International Day of Families is celebrated annually on May 15 to raise awareness of the importance of families, their concerns, and their role in society. This day offers an opportunity to celebrate the diversity of family structures and to recognize the vital role they play in nurturing and shaping individuals and communities. It's a time to honor the bonds of kinship, cherish the memories, and reaffirm commitments to fostering strong, healthy family relationships.

On this day, Zee TV actors like Rohit Suchanti from Bhagya Lakshmi, Karan Vohra from Main Hoon Saath Tere, Paras Kalnawat from Kundali Bhagya and Yesha Rughani from Rabb Se Hai Dua, share how important their family is in their lives, and is always the utmost priority.

Yesha Rughani who essays the role of Ibaadat in Zee TV's Rabb Se Hai Dua said, "I have always been that person who is the happiest when around family. Being brought up in Rajkot, I was always surrounded by a lot of family friends and people who are a huge part of my life. My family, including my extended family, has been my strongest pillars and my biggest support system. Whatever risks and experiments I wanted to take in my life, they were always backing me, pushing me to give my best and making me unstoppable, especially when I decided to pursue a career in acting. Now that I am away from my parents and living with my extended family here in Mumbai while shooting for my show Rabb Se Hai Dua, I miss them a little more today but plan to celebrate it with my loved ones here. This International Family Day, I would just want everyone to cherish the beautiful family around them and make the most of the time you spend with them."

Rohit Suchanti, who essays the role of Rishi in Bhagya Lakshmi said, "I am a complete family man. I love spending time with them. I guess it was from my childhood days that my parents ensured that we spent at least one day in the week together. I guess I got it from them that I try to dedicate one day in the week only to them even today. We have a lot of family gatherings where all my cousins and extended family would come together for dinners, lunches, and trips. It was a ritual to celebrate any occasion with each other. I am truly fortunate to have been born into this family. My family is my biggest strength and strongest support system. Whenever I find myself in a tough situation I always turn to my parents for advice. After I moved to Mumbai, in the initial days it was surely a bit difficult for me to live away from my parents. But now that we live together, everything is just perfect. I also have a home away from home, my Bhagya Lakshmi family. I spend most of my time with them on set, and I am fortunate to have these co-stars as my family."

As the curtains are set to rise on this adrenaline-fueled spectacle, the daring contenders shared their thoughts on being part of this extraordinary journey:

Aditi Sharma says, "Being an actor has been about pushing the boundaries and testing my limits. I get to do exactly that at an entirely new level with Khatron Ke Khiladi. For years, I've poured my heart and soul into bringing characters to life on the screen. But now, as I step aboard Khatron Ke Khiladi, the audience will witness a side of me that has remained largely unexplored - the raw, unfiltered version of who I truly am. On this journey, there will be no scripts and no rehearsals. The fears, the doubts, and the moments of exhilaration will be laid bare before the world. This show is my chance to connect with the audience on a deeper, more authentic level."

Karan Veer Mehra says, "As someone whose life revolves around the pursuit of fitness and adventure, I am super excited to be part of the adrenaline-packed ride that is Khatron Ke Khiladi 14. This opportunity is a dream come true, a chance to push the boundaries of my physical and mental limits in a way that few experiences can rival. With the legendary Rohit Shetty sir at the helm, guiding us through this uncharted territory, I will not only face my fears head-on. I am ready to embrace this journey with open arms. I'm sure it's going to be a transformative experience!"

Niyati Fatnani shares, "The new season of Khatron Ke Khiladi will mark my debut in the realm of reality shows, and I couldn't be more thrilled. I am confident that this show will give me that perfect opportunity to overcome my fears, push my limits, and learn new skills. With a background in dance, I've gained flexibility, which I intend to leverage to the fullest during the show. It's an honour to showcase my stunt skills in the presence of Rohit Shetty sir, and I look forward to making some new memories."

Samarth Jurel aka Chintu says, "After the rollercoaster ride that was BIGG BOSS, I find myself once again at the doorstep of an extraorinary opportunity, one that will test the depths of my courage like never before. My journey on BIGG BOSS last year taught me lessons about resilience, adaptability, and the importance of staying true to oneself in the face of adversity. However, Khatron Ke Khiladi presents an entirely different challenge - one that demands not only mental strength but also physical prowess. I can't put the thrill of performing stunts in Romania in words. It's a chance to redefine the boundaries of what I thought possible."

Abhishek Kumar says, "I've got a lot of love through COLORS' BIGG BOSS from the audiences, and I'm honoured to be collaborating with the channel once more for Khatron Ke Khiladi 14. I hope the course of receiving love from my fans continues as I showcase my daredevil side. I am claustrophobic and this show will allow me to overcome my fear. I'm a big fan of Rohit Shetty's sir action films and it is a dream come true to be mentored by him. To my beloved fans, I make this promise: I'm so grateful to have you all stand by me through thick and thin, I shall give my best to this show."

'Khatron Ke Khiladi 14' will air soon on COLORS.
