Dam being made to prevent soil erosion in Surajpur-Rajjipur river is under question: Ranjit Uppal

SUBHASH KOHLI KALKA, AUG 6

The irrigation department is installing a dam to prevent soil erosion in Surajpur-Rajjipur area, but instead of installing it on the river bank, it has been installed in the middle of the river, due to which the flowing river turned towards the under-construction Sukhomajri bypass. Due to which the newly constructed road, which could not even be inaugurated, was completely damaged. AAP District President Ranjit Uppal reached the spot after people complained and took stock of the situation. When Ranjit Uppal saw the damaged road and the dam being installed on the spot, he talked to the officer of the concerned department over the phone. When the officer was asked why the dam was installed in the middle instead of on the river bank, the officer replied that people have encroached upon the area around the river. Some encroachment has been done by building concrete houses and concrete sheds, and some people are using the vacant space for their personal use. He said that it is strange that illegal encroachment is being protected and huge damage is being done to government property. Stopping the natural flow of the river is not only against nature but is also a le gal crime. Ranjit Uppal said that the condition of this by pass built at the cost of crores is now in front of you. About half a kilometer has been badly damaged. He said that illegal mining is also clearly visible around the bypass road but the administration is probably not able to see it.

Perhaps the administration does not know that this type of illegal mining will also cause huge damage to the bypass road and government property will be damaged, because all this government property is property built from the public's taxes After all, its burden is going to fall on the public once

Editorial Hope rises

hen Donald Trump addressed a room full of Black journalists, he swiftly attacked the identity of his Democratic opponent, Kamala Harris, as a Black woman, suggesting that she had 'only recently' become Black. "She was Indian all the way and then... she made a turn and... became a Black person,"

Harris responded by describing Trump's remarks as "the same old show" of divisiveness and disrespect. And maybe it's because she felt no need to defend the plainly obvious fact that she is and has always been a Black woman as much as an Indian woman that she did not draw attention to her background. Trump's attacks on her identity were predictable and the Harris campaign has preferred to centre its messaging on drawing attention to the 'weirdness' of the Trump campaign, her history as a prosecutor, and Trump's status as a felon. Although she need not centre her campaign on her identity, by sidelining her backstory out of fear that her family's non-white, immigrant background could fan Trump's flames against her, Harris risks missing a crucial opportunity not only for her campaign but for American politics at large.

Trump's comments reminded me of the Elizabeth Warren scandal during the 2016 presidential campaign in which he accused her of inflating her native American heritage to gain advancement in her career as a law professor at Harvard. The scandal led to Trump nicknaming her "Pocahontas" and Warren committing one of the biggest gaffes in recent political memory by attempting to prove her identity with a DNA test. The casting of Warren as a fraud, and her desperate response to correct the impression, doomed her campaign. Harris is likely to be eager to not replicate those results by indulging Trump's attacks.

Perhaps as a result, Harris's stump speeches "tend to speed past personal mythology," as was noted in a New Yorker profile. In her brief mentions of her family, she talks about the lessons she learnt from her Chennai-born mother, Shyamala Gopalan. "My mother instilled in my sister, Maya, and me the values that would chart the course of our lives," she said while on the 2020 presidential campaign trail. "She raised us to be proud, strong Black women. And she raised us to know and be proud of our Indian heritage.

Gopalan and Donald Harris, a Jamaican Marxist economist and an eventual professor at Stanford, met when they both moved to the United States of America for their graduate studies at the University of California, Berkeley

Foreign investors restrain from investing in China

ollowing a severe crisis in the real estate market, foreign investors are restraining themselves from capital investment into commercial properties in China's real estate market, reported Nikkei Asia.

Additionally, the remaining players of the country are pinning their hopes on traditional strategies in areas, including, environmentally friendly developments, Nikkei Asia reported.

Christine Li, the head of research at real estate consultancy Knight Frank told Nikkei Asia, "We have seen some concerns, particularly from the U.S.-based real estate investors. Five to seven years down the road, whether you can find a buyer to exit the Chinese market, is a big question mark."

From January to June this year, cross-border deals in China's commercial properties market were worth USD 3.3 billion which was down by 13 percent compared to last year.

According to data from the investment research group MSCI Japan, despite showing a 35 per cent decline in such deals, topped the Asia Pacific market at USD 3.7 billion.

According to the Nikkei Asia report, US investors invested a mere 600 million yuan into China's property market according to data compiled by MSCI. Though Singaporean capital logged an 80 per cent rise in the first half of 2024 from the previous year. It was still just over a third of its peak investment from the second half of 2019, when it had invested 22 billion yuan into mainland China's market.

This downward trajectory creates a growing concern even among longtime investors in China.

Reportedly, China's property market has been struggling since the government launched a crackdown, as it had rolled out policies to reduce property developers in the country from borrowing loans in 2020.

Evergrande which once stood as China's biggest developer, is now close to liquidation, Nikkei Asia reported.

Additionally, the Chinese player currently shows little hope so far for offshore investors to recoup their costs, while several other private developers are being taken to court for windup petitions. The collapse of the real-estate market sector has damaged the confidence of Chinese families who had built their wealth over the past several decades, pinning their hope on the rise of property prices in China.

During the first six months of 2024, China's overall property investments fell 10.1 percent in value from the pre-

Singapore's sovereign wealth fund GIC which was consistently a top buyer in China's property market, had previously warned that the country has "come to the end of its growth model" which relied on real estate and property development.

This triggered a perception among long-term investors of the positive potential of China's property market. However, the investments have been "suddenly curtailed," GIC Chief Investment Officer Jeffrey Jaensubhakij told Nikkei Asia.

Xavier Lee, an equity analyst at Morningstar, said, "Several Singapore real estate companies with committed projects in China will continue to invest and complete them. They are not expected to suddenly pull out. But we do not expect them to expand aggressively either given the challenging market environment," he told Nikkei

How fatty acids in umbilical cord blood cause autism spectrum disorder neurodevelopmental disease that impacts people's capacity to learn and their social behaviour is known as autism spectrum disorder (ASD). The last several decades have seen a rise in understanding of ASD, particularly in relation to its prevalence and impact on the lives of those who have been diagnosed with it. There is still more research to be done on a number of ASD-related issues

Though the precise origins of ASD remain unknown, the information that is now available suggests that neuroinflammation plays a significant role. Pregnancy-related exposure to polyunsaturated fatty acids (PUFA) and their metabolites may have a significant impact on the development of ASD, according to several research using mice models of the disorder. In mice, PUFA metabolites controlled by cytochrome P450 (CYP) impact foetal development, leading to deficits strongly associated with symptoms of

ASD. Further research is necessary to determine whether the same holds true for humans, as it is currently un-

In an effort to close this knowledge gap, a Japanese research team led by Professor Hideo Matsuzaki of the University of Fukui's Research Centre for Child Mental Development, Dr. Takaharu Hirai of the department of psychiatric and mental health nursing at the school of nursing, and Dr. Naoko Umeda of the department of maternal and child health nursing at the same university examined the levels of CYP PUFA in neonatal umbilical cord blood samples. Their research illuminates potential origins of ASD and was published in Psychiatry and Clinical Sharing the motivation behind their study, Prof. Matsuzaki explains, "CYP metabolism forms both epoxy fatty acids (EpFAs), which have antiinflammatory effects, and dihydroxy fatty acids, or 'diols,' which have inflammatory properties. We hypothesized that the dynamics of CYP-PUFA metabolites during the fetal period, that is, lower EpFA levels, higher diol levels, and/or increased EpFA metabolic enzymes would influence ASD symptoms and difficulties with daily functioning in children after birth.

To test this hypothesis, the researchers investigated the link between PUFA metabolites in umbilical cord blood and ASD scores in 200 children. The cord blood samples had been collected immediately after birth and preserved appropriately, whereas ASD symptoms and adaptive functioning were assessed when the same children were six years old, with the help of

After careful statistical analyses of the results, the researchers identified  $% \frac{\partial f}{\partial x} = \frac{\partial f}{\partial x} + \frac{\partial f}{\partial x} =$ one compound in cord blood that may have strong implications for ASD severity, namely 11,12-dihydroxyeicosatrienoic acids (diHETrE), a dihydroxy fatty acid derived from arachidonic acid.

"The levels of diHETrE, an arachidonic acid-derived diol, in cord blood at birth significantly impacted subsequent ASD symptoms in children and were also associated with impaired adaptive functioning. These findings suggest that the dynamics of diHETrE during the fetal period is important in the developmental trajectory of children after birth," highlights Prof. Mat

More specifically, the researchers found that higher levels of the molecule 11,12-diHETrE had an impact on social interactions, whereas low levels of 8.9-diHETrE impacted repetitive and restrictive behaviors. Moreover, this correlation was more specific for girls than for boys. This newfound knowledge could be crucial in understanding, diagnosing, and potentially preventing ASD. By measuring di-HETrE levels at birth, it may be possible to predict the likelihood of ASD development in children.

'The effectiveness of early intervention for children with ASD is well established and detecting it at birth could enhance intervention and support for children with ASD." muses Prof. Matsuzaki. He also adds that inhibiting diHETrE metabolism during pregnancy might be a promising avenue for preventing ASD traits in children, although more research will be needed in this regard.

In conclusion, these findings open a promising avenue for researchers unraveling the mysteries surrounding ASD. We hope that enhanced under standing and early diagnostics will be able to improve the lives of people with ASD and their families.

Storm of change blowing in Pehowa

Y D SASHTRI PEHOWA, AUGUST 6

With the beginning of the month of August, the activities regarding the assembly elections are gaining momentum. The survey phase is going on to know the choice of the people in Congress and BJP. Meanwhile, a storm of change is blowing here. The phase of activities in BJP and Congress has started gaining momentum. So far, about 2800 candidates have applied for the 90 assembly seats of Haryana in Congress. People's eves are on the religious area Pehwa locat ed in the religious city of Kurukshetra in Haryana. This time the mood of the voters of Pehwa constituency is looking different. Here people are fed up with the traditional candidates. Here people are demanding new faces in Congress and BJP. Pehwa has a history. Sikh candidates have won in most of the assembly elections here. Pehowa in Haryana is traditionally considered a Sikh dominated seat. People come here to perform tarpan for the liberation of their loved ones. People here want freedom from the candidate who stood in the previous elections. In the last Congress rule, Vidhan Sabha Speaker Harmohinder Singh Chattha's son Mandeep Singh Chattha could not make much impact on the constituency by following his popularity and legacy. This was the reason why he had to face defeat in the last two elections. Voters here say that after losing, he could not give time to the constituency

He could not be as sociable as his father Mohinder Singh Chattha and could not participate in the happiness and sorrows of the people. He has not been able to meet the criteria of the kind of MLA the voters here want. In other words, the people of Pehowa have rejected him. People here even say that if the Congress high command fielded any other candidate in place of Chattha, he would give a tough fight to the current MLA. People here are in a mood for change this time. Jogendra Singh Parrot said that if Congress does not field a new face, it will be impossible for it to win the election. Sandeep Kumar said that the wheel of development has stopped in Pehowa. Despite being a religious city, there is a lack of essential facilities. Gursevak Singh says that people do not hesitate to defeat those leaders who remain absent from among the people. People say that there is discontent against the BJP here. The wheel of development has stopped for ten years. Those who lost in the last two elections did not fight their battle properly. Sardar Singh said that his eyes are waiting for the wheel of development to start moving. People here want change.

Political activity has started increasing in Pehowa. Posters in support of the candidates of political parties have started appearing. The people of Pehowa are raising their voice in one voice that they will accept nothing less than

Temporary workers will be made permanent under Cong rule: Sumita

SHIV KUMAR SHARMA KARNAL: Under 'Haryana Mange Hisaab' campaign, Congress

party cornered BJP on its misrule, failures of 10 years and when it reached Sadar Bazar Ambedkar Nagar, Bhim Nagar, Gadaria Mohalla with a 'charge sheet' of questions related to 15 issues against BJP government, residents welcomed Sumita Singh, for mer MLA Karnal. On this occasion, she listened to the problems of Sadar Bazar residents and collected suggestions. On this oc casion, she said that we will go to every village, every city, every street, every house, every family and expose the exploits of BJP government. He said that this government has brought Haryana from where it was in the last 10 years. He said that every person was happy during the rule of Congress but the oppressive policies of BJP have brought the state to the brink of ruin. In the last 10 years, BJP has made every section unhappy, far from development. He said that whether it is about employees or business men, farmers, laborers, today every person of the state is unhap py with the BJP government. Today employees are forced to strike/protest for their rights. The government suppresses the voice of those who demand their rights by using lathis. Today there are no doctors in the hospitals of Haryana, no teachers in the schools and no employees in the government offices. If you go out, the roads are broken. This government has not done any work that can be praised. He said that BJP has exploited the educated youth through Kaushal Nigam. The employees employed under the corporation do not get proper salary, neither pension nor job security. The sword of dismissal always hangs over their heads. This is injustice to the youth. But in future, to free the youth from this mess of temporary jobs, Congress will make permanent recruitments on 2 lakh vacant posts. In 10 years, the state has become number one in unemployment. People are lathicharged for demanding jobs. When farmers and sarpanches placed some demands before the BJP government, instead of accepting their demands, they were lathicharged. This trend has been continuing for the last 10 years.

The government needs to instill a sense of security in the minds of employees. She also said that if the government had considered their demands sympathetically, the strikers in Sirsa would not have had to climb the water tank.
