NEW DELHI: A total subsidy of ₹ 56,993 crore is given every year by the Indian Railways to all categories of passengers, with a 46 per cent rebate on every ticket, Railway Minister Ashwini Vaishnaw said on Wednesday.

"A total of ₹ 56,993 crore subsidy is given every year by the Indian Railways to all classes of passengers," Mr Vaishnaw said during the Question Hour.

Replying to another question on rapid train service, he said the railways has already started such a service – Namo Bharat Rapid Rail – between Bhuj and Ahmedabad and the satisfaction level of passengers is extremely high due to its superior service.

Officials said Namo Bharat Rapid Rail has improved intercity connectivity by covering the 359-kilometre distance between Bhuj and Ahmedabad in 5 hours and 45 minutes, with stops at several stations along the way.

Massive traffic jam at Delhi border as Rahul Gandhi
stopped on way to Sambhal

AGENCY
NEW DELHI, DEC 4

Commuters faced a massive traffic jam at the Ghazipur border on Wednesday morning after police barricaded the area to prevent the Leader of Opposition (LoP) in the Lok Sabha, Rahul Gandhi, Congress MP Priyanka Gandhi and others in the party's delegation from entering Uttar Pradesh.

The blockade was put in place ahead of the Congress delegation's visit to Sambhal in UP to meet the families of victims of the violence in which five youths were killed.

Long queues of vehicles could be seen at the border, leaving commuters frustrated. Security has been tightened at the Delhi-Ghazipur border, adding to the delays.

Several commuters shared their grievances with a news agency.

Om Prakash, returning from the airport, said: "There is a very long jam. I've been stuck here for over an hour and don't know how long it will take to reach home. Why block the road because of Rahul Gandhi's visit?"

Shikha Arora, a student, expressed her frustration to a news agency: "I left early to reach home, but now it's getting very late. What's the need to block roads for his visit to Sambhal?" Another commuter, Kailash, remarked: "It's been 25 minutes since I've been stuck. People face lots of inconvenience due to political activities."

BSF on high alert along Indo-Bangla border amidst rising
tensions in Bangladesh

AGENCY
AGARTALA, DEC 4

In light of the ongoing unrest and volatility in Bangladesh, the Border Security Force (BSF) has heightened security measures along the Indo-Bangla border.

The precautionary step comes as a response to the recent escalation in tension following incidents of violence and instability in Bangladesh.

The situation was further aggravated by an incident on December 2 at the office of the Bangladesh Assistant High Commission in Agartala, which has intensified concerns in the Indian state of Tripura. Tripura, surrounded by Bangladesh on three sides, has witnessed heightened sensitivity due to its geographical proximity and cultural ties with the neighboring country.

Authorities have beefed up border patrolling and surveillance, with BSF personnel on high alert to prevent any spill-over effects or untoward incidents. Riyanka Mukherjee, a BSF Constable said that she feels empowered and confident while serving in BSF.

"I am Constable Riyanka Mukherjee, serving in the Border Security Force (BSF) for the past four years. While performing our duties, we feel empowered, and it gives us the confidence to convey to all women in society that we can take responsibility for ourselves. The role of the BSF at the border is to uphold the sanctity of the international border, instill a sense of security in everyone, and strive to reduce crimes," the constable said.

Raghav Chadha raises concerns over air travel issues in parliament

NEW DELHI, DEC 4

Rajya Sabha MP Raghav Chadha today criticized the government's proposed Bharatiya Vayuyan Vidheyak-2024, while discussing the Indian Aviation Bill 2024 in Parliament. He raised important issues related to air travel and emphasized the need to make air travel more accessible and affordable for the common people.

He emphasized the importance of a robust transportation system for the nation's progress, stating, "When the speed of travel increases, the nation moves forward." Chadha pointed out that increased airfares have made travel unaffordable for the common man.

He cited examples like ticket prices on common routes like Delhi to Mumbai and Patna have soared to Rs. 10,000-Rs. 14,500. He also cited the example of the Maldives, saying that while the government is promoting Lakshadweep instead of the Maldives, the airfare to the Maldives is Rs. 17,000, whereas the fare to Lakshadweep is Rs. 25,000. He remarked, "The country's progress will accelerate only when air travel becomes faster and more affordable." "The government promised that even people wearing slippers would fly, but today, even those wearing Bata shoes cannot afford air travel," he remarked.

MP Raghav Chadha stated that the condition of the country's airports has become worse than bus terminals. Long queues, overcrowding, and poor management are causing significant inconvenience to passengers. He urged immediate steps to improve the situation and enhance traveler amenities.

Raghav Chadha emphasized that air travel should be made accessible to the common men instead of being turned into a luxury. He pointed out that flying and reaching one's destination by air is still a distant dream for a large section of the population. He also highlighted the persistent issues faced by passengers, such as long queues, delays, and lack of basic facilities. Chadha added that a traveler spends Rs. 600-700 to reach the airport by taxi, only to find out that their flight is delayed by three hours. Long queues, delays, and poor facilities have made air travel challenging for passengers.

Chadha highlighted overpriced food and beverages at airports, where even a cup of tea costs Rs. 200-250. He suggested establishing affordable canteens at airports for the convenience of passengers. Chadha also highlighted the difficulty of reaching many major tourist destinations from airports. "The lack of connectivity between tourist spots and airports is affecting our tourism. We are losing potential tourism opportunities," he stated.

Raghav Chadha also expressed concerns about flight delays and cancellations. He said, "People choose expensive air travel to reach their destinations quickly, but flights are often delayed by four to five hours. This is a significant issue, especially in smaller cities where flights are delayed for hours. In such situations, there is no one to take responsibility."

MP Raghav Chadha also raised concerns about the growing monopoly in the aviation sector. He stated that the two existing airlines are selling tickets at exorbitant prices without any regulation.

"If a person with Z-category security can be attacked, what safety can a common man expect in Punjab?" he questioned. He criticized the AAP leadership for interfering in the functioning of the Punjab Police, creating hurdles, and fostering an environment where law enforcement is ineffective. He accused the government of enabling gangsters and radical elements, thereby perpetuating violence and unrest in the state. Insensitive

More and more Indians are seeking asylum in the West, especially in the United States of America, the United Kingdom, and Canada. But the ministry of external affairs, while informing Parliament of a spike in Indians seeking refuge in the US last week, had an intriguing explanation: asylum seekers, the minister of state for external affairs, Kirti Vardhan Singh, stated, “denigrate the nation and society” for personal gain. The Centre’s remark, on record in Parliament, is not only regressive but also an affront to basic human decency. If the external affairs ministry truly believes that the idea of Indians seeking asylum elsewhere hurts the country’s image, such a view is also counterproductive from a policy perspective. According to data, more than 41,000 Indians sought asylum in the US in 2023. That was an increase of more than 850% over the past three years, according to the US department of homeland security. Additionally, more than 90,000 Indians were arrested while trying to enter the US illegally from Canada or Mexico between October 2023 and September 2024. As of 2022, there were an estimated 725,000 undocumented Indians in the US. In the UK, more than 5,000 Indians applied for asylum in 2023 and over 1,000 entered the country illegally that year by crossing the English Channel on small, inflatable boats, risking their lives in the process. As of September 30, 2024, 24,380 asylum claims had been made by Indians in Canada.

These rising numbers of asylum seekers should be a cause for concern. Asylum seekers typically argue that they are victims of persecution, or could reasonably become victims of persecution, in India. Given the implication — that the Indian State persecutes many of its citizens — it is understandable for New Delhi to feel uneasy. But people do not uproot their lives and leave behind everything they know in order to denigrate a country. If an increasing number of Indians feel that they cannot trust the democratic processes and institutions within the country to offer redress to their grievances, that is an indictment of the direction in which the nation is headed. Indeed, this does not look good for the world’s largest democracy, one that has offered asylum to other victims of persecution for centuries. But the onus of fixing the problem lies with the government, not with people driven by desperation to seek refuge in another country. The Narendra Modi government must reflect on what it can do to reassure departing Indians that the country remains their best bet.

Political turmoil in South Korea

South Korea is reeling from a dramatic night of political turmoil, marked by President Yoon Suk Yeol’s failed bid to impose martial law. The move has severely jeopardized Yoon’s presidency, sparking widespread outrage and intensifying calls for his impeachment.

The country’s opposition also said that they were planning to file treason charges against the embattled leader.

In a shocking turn of events, Yoon declared martial law on December 3, accusing the opposition of plotting an “insurgency” and “trying to overthrow the free democracy” in the country and later revoked it, as reported by the New York Times. However, the move was met with fierce resistance from opposition parties, civil society groups, and even some members of Yoon’s own party.

Notably, South Korea’s main opposition has a majority in the parliament, which means they can block President Yoon Suk Yeol’s proposals. The opposition is also trying to impeach top prosecutors for allegedly failing to indict Yoon’s wife on various alleged wrongdoings, as per CNN.

But Yoon has accused parliament of paralyzing government functions and manipulating legislative processes - setting the stage for a political showdown. South Korea’s Yoon Suk Yeol has lost all credibility and “won’t be able to rule,” a former lawmaker and member of the president’s People Power Party said.

“The president lost all his credibility as of today,” Jaeyoung Lee said. “He just won’t be able to rule - period - in my opinion.”

Further, he added that “legislators from the party were working on plans to ask Yoon to resign from the party, adding that “It’s devastating to see this happening in Korea in the year 2024.”

On Tuesday, the president announces the decree in a surprise late-night television address accusing the opposition of sympathising with North Korea and of “anti-state” activities. He specifically points to their efforts to impeach prosecutors.

In a nationally televised speech, President Yoon denounced the opposition for using its majority in the National Assembly to impeach members of his cabinet and block the passage of his government’s Following this, The opposition calls for Yoon’s immediate resignation - and vows to begin impeachment proceedings if he doesn’t step down. Yoon also faces criticism within his own ranks, with his party chief apologizing to the public and asking the president for an explanation.

Grim comedy with feel good aesthetics: 'A man on inside season' 1 review

NILESH SETH

A seemingly light-hearted comedy, that can be classified as a coming-of-age drama, if you’re old enough. The show revolves around a retired professor who is hired by a private detective to spy on an elder care facility. The shenanigans and wholesome moments that unfold there are worth feeling hunky dory but it makes sure that the emotional spectrum reaches grief too; in more than one way.

The show, released on November 21, features actor Ted Danson as the lead actor portraying a retired professor of engineering Charles Nieuwendyk. A year after Charles’ wife Victoria passed away, his daughter Emily urges him to find a new hobby as she is concerned about his increasingly apparent loneliness. And so Charles does. After following up on a newspaper ad put up by Private Investigator Julie, Charles penetrates the Pacific View Retirement Home. His mission? Find the culprit of a theft. The story successfully walks the fence between being a classic whodunit with a clumsy detective, and a conversation about ageing, death and dementia. Hence an emotional viewer may find their grins wiping away their tears. The show being advertised as a comedy, has a tendency to punch you in the face with rather serious and sober issues if you’re not expecting. Hence it is right to say that it would have been better if the writers had built a better foundation of the connection in the details of the story. Stephanie Beatriz, widely known for her role as Rosa Diaz in “Brooklyn Nine-Nine” plays a warm role with dry humour that balances the said fence with Danson’s elder-teen humour. The show observes and explains the developing relations between the various characters that translate into quite complete character arcs. It’s safe to say that the story has the ability to satiate an intent viewer’s need for good character evolution. “A Man on the Inside” walks another fence. On one side, it’s the mystery of continuous thefts at the Pacific View Retirement Home and the other is Charles’ tryst with grief. One makes you smile & laugh while the other hits you with a very relatable experience of pain, guilt and emotional agony. One lifts you up while the other humbles you, all at once. This rather contrasting combination makes it a good pick for your winter watch list earning it a clearance from the editor as a worthwhile recommendation.

Motherhood

Becoming a mother, becoming a perfect mother is perhaps a journey that may never have an end point. I have heard people say that a mother is never wrong, a mother never makes a mistake, a mother has many forms and is called a goddess, but perhaps in this cycle of becoming a goddess, this world has forgotten to consider a mother as a human being, or should I say that a mother has forgotten to consider herself a human being.

Every mother tries to be a perfect mother. She does everything for her children that is good for them. But in this race to become perfect, she is not allowed to make a mistake because everyone considers her a goddess, she is probably not considered a human being. In the eyes of people, a mother is a person who wakes up every morning with a smile on her face, keeps the same smile on her lips all day long and clicks beautiful photos with her child and posts them on her social media handle and gets the tag of a perfect mother. But in reality, a mother is not like that. In reality, a mother is someone who, even if she wakes up 10 minutes late in the morning, spends the entire time in tension lest her child be late for school, lest her child go hungry today, lest her child’s lunch be packed.

Then after sending her child to school, she herself goes to her work and after returning from her work, hugs her child with that smile without complaining, cooks food for her child, gets her child’s homework done and then gets involved in the rest of the housework. How strange it is that in the process of becoming a perfect mother, she forgets that she has her own identity. She has her own existence. Her own existence sometimes becomes a gentle soul who wants to give her child all the love in the world, sometimes her own existence becomes a lioness who wants to protect her child from all the evil in the world and sometimes her own existence becomes strict so that she can give a good direction to her child’s future and in all this struggle she forgets that she is also a human being. In fact, a mother is such a person who wakes up completely tired, defeated, with sleep in her eyes, keeps a smile on her lips and makes her child laugh, laughing for her child. She walks around her child all day long for her child’s future, for his present. But in reality, she, like other normal people, is looking for 10 minutes of rest a day. But despite of all, she is a perfect mother.

The Two Voices

As still small voice spake unto me, ‘Thou art so full of misery, Were it not better not to be?’

Then to the still small voice I said; ‘Let me not cast in endless shade What is so wonderfully made.’

To which the voice did urge reply; ‘To-day I saw the dragon-fly
Come from the wells where he did lie.
‘An inner impulse rent the veil Of his old husk: from head to tail Came out clear plates of sapphire mail.
‘He dried his wings: like gauze they grew;
Thro’ crofts and pastures wet with dew A living flash of light he flew.’
I said, ‘When first the world began, Young Nature thro’ five cycles ran, And in the sixth she moulded man..

Stimulating hypothalamus restores walking in paralyzed patients: Study

Researchers at EPFL and Lausanne University Hospital (CHUV), led by professors Gregoire Courtine and Jocelyne Bloch, have made significant advances in the treatment of spinal cord injuries (SCI). The scientists boosted the recovery of lower limb movements in two people with partial SCI by delivering deep brain stimulation (DBS) to an unanticipated region of the brain—the lateral hypothalamus (LH), considerably increasing their autonomy and well-being.

Wolfgang Jager, a 54-year-old from Kappel, Austria, has been in a wheelchair since 2006 after a ski accident left him with a spinal cord injury. Participating in the clinical trial, he experienced firsthand how deep brain stimulation could restore his mobility and independence.

“Last year on vacation, it was no problem to walk a couple of steps down and back to the sea using the stimulation,” Jager shared, describing the newfound freedom DBS has given him. Beyond walking, the therapy has improved everyday tasks. “I can also reach things in my cupboards in the kitchen,” he added. DBS is a well-established neurosurgical technique that involves implanting electrodes into specific brain regions to modulate neural activity. Traditionally, DBS has been used to treat movement disorders like Parkinson’s disease and essential tremor by targeting areas of the brain responsible for motor control.

However, applying DBS to the lateral hypothalamus to treat partial paralysis is a novel approach. By focusing on the LH, the researchers at .NeuroRestore tapped into an unexpected neural pathway that had not been considered before for motor recovery. In the study published in Nature Medicine, not only did the DBS show immediate results to augment walking during rehabilitation, but patients also showed long-term improvement that persisted even when the stimulation was turned off. These findings suggest that the treatment promoted a reorganization of residual nerve fibers that contribute to sustained neurological improvements.

“This research demonstrates that the brain is needed to recover from paralysis. Surprisingly, the brain is not able to take full advantage of the neuronal projections that survive after a spinal cord injury.

Here, we found how to tap into a small region of the brain that was not known to be involved in the production of walking in order to engage these residual connections and augment neurological recovery in people with spinal cord injury,” says Courtine, professor of neuroscience at EPFL, Lausanne University Hospital (CHUV) and UNIL and co-director of the .NeuroRestore center.

The success of this DBS therapy hinged on two complementary approaches: discoveries enabled by novel methodologies in animal studies and the translation of these discoveries into precise surgical techniques in humans. For the surgery, the researchers used detailed brain scans to guide the precise locations of the small electrodes into the brain, performed by Bloch at CHUV, while the patient was fully awake. “Once the electrode was in place and we performed the stimulation, the first patient immediately said, ‘I feel my legs.’ When we increased the stimulation, she said, ‘I feel the urge to walk!’ This real-time feedback confirmed we had targeted the correct region, even if this region had never been associated with the control of the legs in humans.

At this moment, I knew that we were witnessing an important discovery for the anatomical organization of brain functions,” says Bloch, neurosurgeon and professor at the Lausanne University Hospital (CHUV), UNIL and EPFL, and co-director of the .NeuroRestore center.

The identification of the LH as a key player in motor recovery after paralysis is in itself an important scientific discovery, given that this region has traditionally only been associated with functions like arousal and feeding. This breakthrough emerged from the development of a novel multi-step methodology that began with whole-brain anatomical and functional mapping to establish the role of this region in walking, followed by experiments in preclinical models to establish the precise circuits involved in the recovery. Ultimately, these results led to clinical trials in human participants. “It was fundamental research, through the creation of detailed brain-wide maps, that allowed us to identify the lateral hypothalamus in the recovery of walking. Without this foundational work, we would not have uncovered the unexpected role this region plays in walking recovery,” says Jordan Squair, a lead author of the study. The advanced imaging platform at the Wyss Center played a critical role in this research by providing high-resolution imaging capabilities that enabled the team to map the anatomical and functional activity of neurons across the brain, enabling the identification of the lateral hypothalamus.

These remarkable results pave the way for new therapeutic applications to augment recovery from SCI. Future research will explore integrating DBS with other technologies, such as spinal implants that have already shown their potential in restoring movement after SCI. “Integrating our two approaches—brain and spinal stimulation—will offer a more comprehensive recovery strategy for patients with spinal cord injuries,” says Courtine.

Good fats for weight loss every indian woman needs to know

Increase your intake of healthy fats to lose weight. Here are five good fats every Indian woman must add to her kitchen shelf and use regularly. Coconut Oil

Coconut oil is a medium-chain triglyceride (MCT), which metabolises very differently from long-chain fats. It is directly absorbed into the bloodstream and provides quick energy. It helps boost your metabolism and, thus, aids in your weight-loss journey. Coconut oil is a staple in South Indian cuisine.

Ghee This clarified butter is another worthy source of MCTs. It includes butyrate – a short-chain fatty acid that supports growth in beneficial gut bacteria. The gut and weight loss are related – the gut helps to process food's digestion and assimilation. Ghee is also a powerhouse of fat-soluble vitamins A, D, E, and K, all important for overall health.

Avocados Though not an original addition to the Indian diet, over the past few years, the avocado has found great favour with health-conscious Indians due to the countless benefits it offers. Avocados are packed with monounsaturated fats, which prevent belly fat, hence helping the heart. Additionally, their high fibre content eases stool passage and keeps one full for long periods. You can include avocados in your diet by adding them to salads, enjoying them on toast, or blended in a smoothie. They are creamy in consistency and not overwhelming in flavour, so they do well with many different types of foods. Nuts And Seeds Nuts and seeds are full of good fats, proteins and fibre – all so valuable in any weight-loss diet. Two particularly nutritious nuts are almonds and walnuts. Rich in omega-3, these help the body reduce inflammation and support one on a weight-loss journey.

It's not the fat; it's the type of fat and the accompanying combination of protein and fibre found in nuts and seeds that can be so satiating, and so kill cravings. A handful of nuts as a mid-morning snack or a sprinkle of seeds on your salad can make a big difference when it comes to managing weight.

Olive Oil Olive oil, particularly extra virgin olive oil, is a healthy fat for the body, and it can aid in losing weight.

Fortis Mohali successfully performs Transcatheter Mitral Valve Replacement on 81-year-old patient

Chandigarh: Fortis Hospital, Mohali has successfully performed a Transcatheter Mitral Valve Replacement (TMVR) procedure on an 81-year-old patient, marking a significant milestone in advanced cardiac care. The patient, diagnosed with severe mitral regurgitation (a heart condition that occurs Cardiology, Fortis Hospital, Mohali, along with his team performed the procedure, using cutting-edge TMVR techniques to replace the damaged mitral valve with a bioprosthetic valve (a heart valve replacement made from biological materials like porcine tissue, bovine pericardium, or human tissue). This minimally invasive procedure, performed using a catheter through a small incision, eliminated the need for open-heart surgery, reducing pain and recovery time.

This technique is particularly beneficial for patients who are too weak or have other health conditions that make open-heart surgery too risky. TMVR can be used to treat conditions like a leaky mitral valve or a valve that has become stiff and doesn't open properly. The patient and their family were counseled on the safety and efficacy of the procedure before moving forward. Post-procedure, the patient showed significant improvement, with stable cardiac function and a return to daily activities.

Dr. Kochar said, "TMVR is a transformative procedure for elderly patients with severe mitral valve disease.

when the mitral valve doesn't close properly, causing blood to flow backward into the heart's upper chamber) had been struggling with symptoms like breathlessness and fatigue, with medications providing limited relief. Valve replacement became the only viable option to restore normal cardiac function. Dr. Arun Kochar, Additional Director
